

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Introduction.

The history of the Seven Wise Masters forms an important epoch in the history of European popular stories, because it affords the most remarkable evidence of the literary descent and origin of stories, as distinct from a traditional descent. Professor Comparetti in his Researches respecting the Book of Sindibad, published by the Folk-Lore Society, Mr. Clouston in his Bakhtyar Nama and in his Book of Sindibad, two privately printed books, and Mr. Wright in his Sevyn Sages, printed by the Percy Society in 1846, have practically exhausted the literary history of this famous collection of stories. Shortly summarised from these three sources the main facts are these. There was an ancient original Indian book of stories which became so popular that it was copied frequently, and thus handed down from one generation to another. From this book two separate groups of texts have descended. To the first belong all the texts in the Eastern languages; to the other belong the Dolopathos, the Historia Septem Sapientum, the Erasto, and other numerous texts of the various European literatures of the Middle Ages. With the Eastern group of texts we have now nothing to do beyond saying that Professor Comparetti has restored, in the scholarly book above mentioned, the form of the original text for the guidance of the modern student. The Western group of texts has a history of its own quite apart from its Eastern origin. It has kept the original framework, but it has varied the setting; and this variation will be found of great interest to the student of popular tradition. Before, however, we come to this part of the subject, let us see the kind of work with which we are dealing. The framework of the romance is as follows: A young prince, falsely accused by the wife of the king, his father, of having attempted to offer her violence, is defended by seven sages, who relate a series of stories to show the deceits of women, the queen at the same time urging the death of the accused prince by the example of stories told by herself. This system of story-telling is practically the same as that adopted in the Arabian Nights. Boccaccio adopted this plan in his Decameron; Chaucer adopted it in his Canterbury Tales.

Among the Eastern texts is a famous one in Hebrew, dating as far back as the first half of the thirteenth century. Under the title of Historia Septem Sapientum Romæ, a Latin translation of this was made by Dam Jehans, a monk of the abbey of Haute Selve, in the diocese of Nancy, in the thirteenth century. The earliest printed copy of this version that I have been able to find is one printed at Cologne in 1490, of which I shall say something a little further on.

It was through this Latin version that the work was communicated to nearly all the languages of Western Europe; and in 1520 a translation into English was printed by the famous printer Wynkyn de Worde. A fine copy of this is preserved in the British Museum, and from it is printed the text of the One or two pages are missing from this present version. copy; and the passages are restored from the earliest chap-book version which I have been able to discover-namely, that printed in 1671 at London, and belonging to the British Museum. This chap-book version is nearly identical with the Wynkyn de Worde, with the simple alteration of the spelling to the modern forms. One curious variation, however, illustrating the force of the change of religious opinions at the time of the Reformation, is well worth noting. On page 172 of our text will be found related how the murdered children of the Emperor Lodwyke were found alive singing "of ye moost blessed vyrgyne Mary, aue Maria gracia plena dñs tecum," but in the chap-book of 1671 it is said they were singing praises to the Almighty.

Since 1671 many chap-book versions have been issued, and I have succeeded in obtaining a copy still published in Dublin. These later versions are all much deteriorated from the original. Besides the 1671 edition, there are the following: London 1684, 1687, and 1697; Glasgow 1713; London [1750]; Newcastle 1750; London 1780-7 [1785]; Boston 1794; London 1805; Warrington 1815. And I have no doubt that it has been continually reproduced until the present day.

Besides the closeness of the translation of the prose version of Wynkyn de Worde, one curious feature to be noted is the series of illustrations. It is well known that German woodcuts supplied English books with illustrations,* and this is a good instance of the practice. In the Bibliographer (vol. ii. p. 70) Mr. W. M. Conway has told the history of the woodcuts of the Lubeck edition of the Seven Wise Men. It was first printed in April, 1488, with the name of Claes Leeu, probably a brother of Gerard Leeu. In 1400 appeared another edition printed at Cologne by J. Koelhof de Lubeck, to whom the blocks must have been lent. He returned them to Leeu with the exception of one, which was either retained by him or lost on the journey; and the imperfect set, a new block being made by some other hand to replace the lost one, was employed in the edition printed by Leeu on the 6th November, 1490. One of the cuts (see p. 21) represents the Emperor coming angrily into the chamber of his wife with a drawn sword in his hand and reproaching her with her infidelity. She is seated on a chair on the right, with her hands clasped in an attitude rather of shyness than fear or remorse. One reason for this seems to be discoverable from the fact that along the top of the bed behind, the words Ave regina coelerum can be traced carved in reverse; and it is quite possible that the whole cut, with the exception of the figure of the Emperor, was copied from some print representing the Annunciation.

Both these editions, that by J. Koelhof de Lubeck and that printed by Gerard Leeu on 6th November, 1490, are in the library of the British Museum, the latter under the title of Historia de Calumnia Novercali. This book has a preface not contained in the other edition, and it formed the subject of a communication to the Gentleman's Magazine for 1767, p. 541, in a letter signed T. From this letter it would appear that later editions were issued. The preface quoted in the letter is the same as the preface in the British Museum copy, but the words of the latter are much more contracted than the writer in the Gentleman's Magazine indicates was the case with his copy. This letter is, I think, worth reproducing, as it conveys some useful information. It is as follows:—

"I lately met with a mutilated copy of a book, which to me, at least, appears a curiosity. It bears for its title, Historia de Calumnia Novercali: an history now commonly sold at stalls for the entertainment of English children, under the title of The History of the Seven Wise Masters; with which last-mentioned book mine agrees as to the substance and order of the tales, but differs considerably from it in the form and manner of relating them.

"It is printed in sixteens, in the common Gothic character of the time (the beginning, as I judge, of the 16th century), an English or black face approaching to a Roman, on a pica body, and with many abbreviations, and is ornamented with wooden cuts of the size of the pages, which, considering their age, are by no means contemptible.

- "The preface runs thus:-
- "'Compositâ pridem Calumniæ Novercalis Historia quæ Septem Sapientum dicitur, pulchro quidem argumento, pulchris etiam ac memoratu dignis tractata exemplis, in utramq: partem & defensionis & condemnationis sive vera sive ficta sit, nihil ad te attinere puto mi Gerarde: magis autem quid doceat adverte, intelligimus ex ea & qui sint malarum mulierum, & pravorum liberorum, & zelotyporum itemq: delirorum senum aliarumq: personarum mores atq: fortunæ varia ratione, ut quid caveri quidve eligi oporteat agnoscamus. Cum autam nominum quorundam ratio temporibus satis respondere visa non esset, & textus nimium fluxus minimeq: cohærens videretur non indignum judicavi quo tibi morem gererem id postulanti, paululum mutatis verbis obmissisq: nominibus ne legentem offendant, re ipsa integra servata, hanc narationem efferre; ne quid inventori laudis aut inventioni veritatis detractum esse videatur: imposito potius nomine Calumniæ Novercalis qualis & Phædræ fuit is Hyppolitum; et simili quoq: genere uxoris Putipharis in Joseph Hebræum; & senum illorum in Susannam; ut eo nomine historia hæc majorem notitiam gratiamq: apud lectores sit habitura.'
- "From hence it appears that this book is an alteration and improvement of a more ancient work, intitled Historia Septem Sapientum, and, as the particulars here said to be altered are retained unaltered in the English translation, it should seem that the English history is translated from a performance of a more early date than this."

The woodcuts of the Wynkyn de Worde are not identical with the Cologne edition, but copies, having been decidedly improved. All these are reproduced in facsimile in the present edition. Owing to the missing pages, one or two of these illustrations are not given in the British Museum copy. The Cologne edition contains a frontispiece plate, one after the first two as printed on pages 4 and 8 of our text, and two printed at the end of the book, making four in all, which are not contained in the British Museum copy of the Wynkyn de Worde.

We will now consider the stories given in this version of the Seven Wise Masters. Although the framework, as I have pointed out, is ancient, the setting has been altered. The stories that suited Eastern fancy did not suit Western; and accordingly we have a considerable variation. In order to have the stories clearly before us, the following analysis will be found useful:—

(1.) The first example of the Empress.—In the garden of a Roman burgess was a tree famed for its cure of all diseases—the burgess one day discovered a "fair young imp"—this was planted and put under the care of the gardener—the young tree did not flourish—the burgess commanded the branches of the overshading old tree to be cut down to the ground—the young tree then did not flourish—the burgess commanded the old tree to be cut down to the ground - the young tree died.

- (2.) The example of the first Master.—A knight had one son—also a greyhound and a falcon—the knight went to a tourney—a serpent in the hall attacked the child—the falcon roused the attention of the greyhound—the greyhound fought the serpent and killed it—the greyhound, wounded, went and laid down by the cradle of the child, which became covered with his blood—the nurses coming in thought the child was killed by the greyhound—they tell their mistress, who tells the knight—the knight kills the greyhound—he afterwards discovers his error and repents.
- (3.) The second example of the Empress.—An Emperor had a forest in which was a boar that destroyed all men going through the forest—the Emperor proclaimed that whoever should slay the boar should marry his daughter—a shepherd by stratagem slew the boar, and married the daughter.
- (4.) The example of the second Master.—In a city there was an ancient knight who had married a young wife—there was a law or custom in that city that whoever was found in the streets after the ringing of a certain bell should be put in the pillory—the wife had a paramour, and every night she went to her lover. One night the husband woke and missed his wife, and on her return would not let her in—she went to the well and pretended to drown herself—the husband came out of the house to help his wife out of the well—she then ran into the house and locked the doors, and her husband being found in the streets by the watch, was taken to prison and on the morrow put in the pillory.

- (5.) The third complaint of the Empress.— There was in Rome a knight that had two daughters and one son—the knight, by hunting and tournaments, spent all his substance. There was an emperor at that time who had a tower full of gold—the knight and his son agreed to steal some of the gold—the keeper of the tower put a vessel full of pitch that the robber might fall in—the second time the knight and his son went the knight fell into the pitch—the son cut off the father's head and hid it, that the body should not be recognised—the daughters of the knight made a great outcry on seeing their father's body dragged through the streets—the son then wounded himself, and the officers believed his story that it was on account of his wound that his sisters made lamentations.
- (6.) The example of the third Master.—There was a rich burgess that had a "pie" which he loved and taught to speak—his wife had a lover who visited her in the absence of the burgess—the pie threatened to tell the burgess—the wife imitated rain and hail and snow on the bird's cage and nearly killed her—when the burgess returned the pie told him that his wife's lover had stayed all night with her, and that the hail, rain, and snow that night had nearly killed him—the master hearing that the night had been quite fine, killed the bird, thinking it had told lies—he afterwards found out the truth.

- (7.) The fourth example of the Empress.—There were once seven wise masters who governed Rome under an Emperor, who by their artifices they made blind whenever he left the palace—the Emperor, on pain of death, desired the seven wise masters to cure him—the masters discover a child who shewed the meaning of dreams—they brought him to the Emperor—the child discovered in the Emperor's bedchamber a well which had seven springs—the child commanded the wise masters to be killed, one at a time, and thrown into the well—the well and springs vanished.
- (8.) The example of the fourth Master.—There was an old knight who married a young wife—the wife wished to have a lover, but on the persuasion of her mother tried the knight three times: 1st, by cutting down a favourite tree—2nd, by killing a favourite hound—3rd, by destroying everything on the table at a banquet. The two first the knight forgave, the third time he brought a barber who opened veins in the wife's arms—the wife thereupon said she would be content with her husband.
- (9.) The fifth example of the Empress.—There reigned in Rome an Emperor who was covetous and loved gold above all things.—In the city was a wise master who made a tower, and in it as many images as there were provinces governed by Rome, and when there was any rebellion or dispute in these distant provinces the images rang a bell, and so informed the people. The kings of these provinces consulted together how best to defeat Rome. Four knights undertook to get the images and tower destroyed if they could have four tons of gold—they took this and went to Rome—and represented themselves as soothsayers, and pretended to discover by dreams quantities of gold which they had previously hidden—they obtained permission of the Emperor to dig under the tower for more gold—undermined the tower and rode away—the counsellors of the Emperor put him to death for betraying the image to their enemies.

- (10.) The example of the fifth Master.—There was a famous physician named Ypocras—he had a nephew named Galienus, who in time excelled Ypocras—the king of Ungary sent for Ypocras to cure his son—Ypocras sent Galienus instead—Galienus on seeing the sick child said to the queen that the king was not its father, and demanded to know who was—the queen told him the truth and Galienus cured the child. Ypocras on hearing from Galienus that he had cured the child killed him by craft—Ypocras was taken grievously sick, and his scholars and disciples were unable to heal him—He knew that for the death of Galienus he was made sick—confessed from envy he had slain him, and died.
- (11.) The sixth example of the Empress.—There was a king marvellously deformed in his visage so that women hated and abhorred him—the king desired his steward to bring a fair and beauteous woman, and promised a large sum of money to the woman—the steward from covetousness insisted on his own wife going to the king and thus obtaining the money—the king found out that the steward had undone his own wife, banished him on pain of death and kept the wife. The king assembled a great army to conquer Rome, but by the stratagems of seven wise masters there was defeated with great slaughter and killed.

- (12.) The example of the sixth Master.—There was an emperor of Rome who had three knights whom he loved above There was also in the city an ancient knight who had a fair young wife—this wife would sit at her window looking into the street and sing. The three knights at different times passed her window and fell in love with her—they each offered her a hundred florins—she consented to receive them, promising to send for them on a suitable opportunity. She told her husband, and suggested that when the knights came he should kill them and keep the hundred storins - the husband consented and killed each of the knights—the wife got her brother to dispose of the first body, and by telling him the corpse had come back again, of the other two-the husband afterwards quarrelled with his wife and struck her-she in revenge told how he had murdered the three knights—they were both drawn at a horse's tail and hanged.
- (13.) The seventh example of the Empress.—A king loved his wife above all things and locked her up always in a strong castle and kept the keys himself. A knight in distant parts dreamed of a fair queen whose love he would win—the queen dreamt the same night of the knight—the knight travelled about till he came to the queen's tower, and knew her for the lady of his dream.—He entered the king's service—fought bravely, was made the king's steward, and gained permission of the king to build a place adjoining the castle—He built a secret passage to the queen's rooms—gained her love—she gave him a ring the king had given her—the king saw the ring on the knight's hand and demanded of the queen the ring he had given her—she showed it to the king having previously got it back from the knight—the knight asked the king to be present at a banquet at which would be his lady love-presented the queen to the king as a lady of his own country—the king after the banquet went to the queen's rooms, found her there, and thought he had been mistaken a second time—the knight asked the king to be present at his wedding and to give the bride awaythe king gave the queen to the knight and saw them sail away from the city—went back to the castle and found out how he had been deceived.

(14.) The example of the seventh Master.—A knight had a fair young wife whom he tenderly loved—one day she cut her hand and the sight of her blood killed her husband—she bewailed his death greatly—would not leave the grave—her friends made a little house close by where she might stay and get food. When a trespasser against the law was hanged the sheriff was obliged to watch all night by the gallows, and if the body was stolen the sheriff had to lose his land and his life. It happened soon after that a man was hanged, and the sheriff watched by the gallows—he saw the little house, asked permission to enter to warm himself—the sheriff went back to the gallows and found the body stolen—told the lady, who advised him, if he would marry her, to take up her dead husband and hang him on the gallows in place of the thief—when the body was dug up, the sheriff said he could not hang her husband up as he was, the thief having lost two front teeth, his ears, and was otherwise mutilated—the lady mutilated her husband in a corresponding manner—she reminded the sheriff of his promise to marry her—he refused, and killed her,

(15.) The example of Dioclesian, the King's son .- A knight had one son, who was sent away to learn, and returned well favoured—as they sat at table a nightingale sang—the son interpreted the song to mean that he should become great and be waited upon by his father and mother—the knight was angered, and cast his son into the sea-the son swam to land, from which he was rescued by a ship—the shipmen sold him to a duke—the duke took him into favour—the king of the country (Egypt) summoned his council to tell him why ravens followed him wherever he went, and promised to give his daughter to him who would interpret the event—the child, who went with the duke, interpreted the event, and the ravens left the country—the king thereupon took the child, Alexander, to live with him—before marrying his daughter, Alexander asked leave to visit the court of Titus-leave was granted, and he went and was much loved—there came also the son of the King of France, Lodwyke-the two, Lodwyke and Alexander, were much alike—the emperor had a daughter whom Lodwyke fell in love with—Alexander used to attend her—she fell in love with him-he, however, allowed Lodwyke to attend her in his stead—he assisted Lodwyke in his suit—presented gifts to her three times on behalf of Lodwyke-finally she consented to receive Lodwyke-the knights found out the intrigue, and sought to slay Lodwyke, but Alexander defended his friendletters came to tell Alexander of the death of the King of Egypt-Alexander went to Egypt-Lodwyke at parting gave him a ring-Guydo, son of the King of Spain, then came to the court—he found out Lodwyke with the emperor's daughter, and told the emperor—a day of battle between Lodwyke and Guydo was appointed—Lodwyke was afraid to meet him, and by advice of the emperor's daughter got the day of battle adjourned, and went to Alexander-Alexander was going to be married to his betrothed-being so like Lodwyke he agreed to take his place, and Lodwyke was to take Alexander's place at the wedding, and to put a naked sword between him and Alexander's wife on the night of their marriage-Alexander went, as Lodwyke, and defeated and slew Guydo-Lodwyke, as Alexander, married his betrothed and kept the compact of putting a sword between them-when Alexander returned his wife, annoyed at him not loving her the first night, would not accept his embraces—she grew to love a knight, and by poison made Alexander a leper-he was driven from Egypt-he travelled to Lodwyke's court (who had succeeded Titus on the throne)—he made himself known to Lodwyke—Lodwyke asked his master to cure his friend—they could not do so—the only cure was revealed to Alexander in a dream—it was for Lodwyke to kill his two sons and wash his body with the blood of them—Lodwyke does this, and his wife afterwards agrees to it—Alexander is restored—the sons come to life again—Lodwyke assists Alexander in the recovery of Egypt—after a time he resolved to see his father and mother—he goes to them without revealing himself—they wait upon him—he then reveals himself to them, forgave them, and took them, honoured, to Egypt.

Of these fifteen stories only three are the same as those given in the Book of Sindibad, as published by Professor Comparetti—namely, No. 2, the example of the first Master, which is told by the fifth Master in the Sindibad version; No. 6, the example of the third Master, which is told by the first Master of the Sindibad version; and No. 11, the sixth example of the Empress, which is told by the fourth Master of the Sindibad version. No. 3, the second example of the Empress, may perhaps be a variant of the fifth example of the Empress in the Sindibad version. The remaining stories then might, prima facie, be considered of Western origin; and perhaps genuine Folk-Tales thus early enshrined in literature. No. 4 is to be found in Peter Alfonsi's Disciplina Clericalis and in the Decameron. And Mr. Wright, in his Introduction to The Seven Sages (Percy Society), p. liii. says he heard the same story told traditionally in an English country town of a townsman who had a scolding unruly wife. No. 5 is a variant of the legend of Rhampsinitus, king of Egypt, as told by Herodotus; and a similar legend is given in Pausanias, lib. ix. c. 37. No. 7 contains some of the incidents of Merlin's story told by the Chroniclers. No. 10, the example of the fifth Master, is something like Campbell's "Fearachur Leigh," No. xlvii. of his Highland Stories (vol. ii. p. 161). No. 13 bears an analogy to the plot of the Mile Gloriosus of Plautus. Upon the entire question of the occurence elsewhere of these stories I would refer to Mr. Clouston's Book of Sindibad privately printed in 1884.

There are one or two curious words and expressions which may be of use to the philologist, but the reader will find that the anguage used is mainly that of the present day with a different spelling. Some of the difficulties of this style have been obviated by the insertion, where necessary, of letters left out in contracted words, and these insertions are printed in italics to distinguish them from the original.

The maysters seynge yt sayd. Wherfore lyft ye vp your eyen so sharply. He answered it is no merueyll, for in my slepe I saw the vppermost parte of the chamber inclyned towarde the erthe, or vnder me it was lyfte vp. This herynge ye maysters sayd amonge themselfe, Yf this childe may lyue he shal be a man of grete connyge I fame.

How the Emperour by the couseyll of y° grete prynces ? lordes of his Empyre wedded an other wyfe.

The prynces and grete lordes of the Empyre in the meane tyme came to the Emperour 't sayd, My lorde ye haue only but one sone, it is possyble yt he myght happen to dye. And therfore it were profytable that ye sholde wedde an other wyfe to engendre and make mo chyldren to thentente that the Empyre of Rome be not lefte without heyre. Also ye are so myghty that yf it sholde happen you to gete many chyldren ye may promote 't auaunce them all to grete dygnytees and lordshyppes. Therupon answerde themperour, It is your counseyll that I shall take an other wyfe, than seke me one yt is gracyous / pure vyrgyne fayre and gentyll borne, I than shall I followe your counseyll and aduyse. They went 't sought and serched many kyngdomes and londes 't at the laste they founde the kynges doughter of Castyle that ryght fayre was 't beateuouse, 't her they gaue the Emperour to wyf. She behad her so well that anone in her loue he was taken so sore that he forgate and put in oblyuyon all the heuvnesse I sorowe of his herte that he had taken for ye deth of his fyrste wyfe. And they lyued longe togyder wout chyldren. And as Thempresse sawe yt she myght not coceyue for she herde yt themperour had a sone wt seuen wyse maysters to lerne t nourysshe to yt behouffe [and] p[ro]fyte of Thempyre, she thought in herself t wysshed his deth. And from yt houre forth she ymagyned how she myght conspyre his deth. It hapned on a nyght as yt Emperour lay in his bed, he sayd to thempresse, My [most dear and best beloved wife, I shall now open to you the secrets of my heart, for under the sun there is no creature that I love so well as you and therefore trust in my love.

Then said the fair Empress: if it be so as you say, I require of you, a little boon or petition. Desire what you will, said the Emperor and all that to me is possible, I shall fulfil, and give Then said the Empress, my dear Lord, you know I have no child yet by you conceived for which I am sore pensive and heave; but Fame that never conceals it self long to true joy, hath delivered this happy truth to me; that ye have one Son only the which is sent to the seven Wise Masters to be taught and governed, and him I hold and require for my own son: wherefore I beseech ye send for him that I may see him and have consolation of his presence, as though he were mine own. Hereupon answered the Emperor it is sixteen years past since I saw him, your will shall be fulfilled. Incontinent the Emperor sent unto the seven wise Masters a Letter sealed with his secret Sign, that upon pain of death they should bring his son in the feast of Penticost following.

[How the seven Wise Masters after the sight of the Emperor's letter would first observe the course and divine for shewing of the Firmament, and Planets, whether it were good to obey his commandment or not.

[And when the Masters by the letter had understood the Emperors will in the night they went and beheld the stars in the Firmament, whether it would be expedient to bring the child to the Emperor or not? and they saw clearly in the stars, that if they should lead the child in that time assigned, at the first word he should speak he should die an evil death: wherefore they were all very sorry; and as they beheld another star. they saw, that if they delivered not the child at the day aforesaid, they should lose their heads. Then said one of them of two evils the least is to be chosen: it is better that all we die, than that the child should lose his life: therefore that we may save the childs life let us go to the Emperor. And as they were thus sorrowful, the child came down from his chamber, and seeing his Masters so heavy, he demanded the cause of their heaviness: whereunto they answered: Sir, we have received your Fathers Letters that upon pain of death, now this high feast of Penticost we shall lead you to your countrey, whereupon we have beholden the firmament, wherein we clearly find, that if we (within the time prefixed) present you to your father, at the first word that ye shall pronounce out of your mouth ye shall be to the most vilest death condemned. Then said the child, I must also behold the Firmament with the stars: and so he did; and found clear in a little star, that if he could abstain from speaking seven dayes, he should be preserved and save his life, And after he had seen this, he call'd his Masters and shewed them the star, and said Behold my dear Masters, I see perfectly in the star, that if I abstain myself seven daies, I shall save my life. Ye are now seven Masters, the wisest of all the world, it is an easie thing for you, every of you for me one day to answer and with your wise answer every of you his day, my life may save and keep; and in the eighth day I shall speak my self, and save my life and all you from peril. As the Masters did behold that certain star, they thought with themselves that the child had said truth, saying, Almighty God be thanked, that the wisdom and cunning of our Disciple exceedeth us all. Then said the first master Pantillus, Lord, I shall speak for you the first day, and save your life. And Lentulus, the second master said I shall for you the second day answer; and so consequently every of them promised to answer for himself his day; and this said, they cloathed the child in purple, leaped on horseback with a fair company and hasted with the child to the Emperor.

[How the Emperor rode to meet his son coming from study with Joy, Solemnity and Triumph.]

Whan themperour perceyued yt his sone was comynge upon ye waye, he rode with grete joye to mete hym. The maysters vnderstandyng the comynge of themperour sayd to the chylde, It is best that we departe, I in the meane whyle we maye prouyde how we may saue your lyfe. The chylde sayd it pleaseth me well that ye so doo, but haue mynde of me in tyme of my As they that herde, they toke theyr leue and departed towardes ye Cyte. The chylde came after accompanyed ryght honourably. And as he and his fader themperour were mette, for joye 't gladnesse he toke hym about the necke It kyssed hym and sayd, My dere sone how is it with you/ is it (sic) longe sythen that I sawe you. He bowed downe his hede and answerd no thynge. The fader had grete wonder why that he spake not and thought in himselfe that his maysters had hym so enformed that he rydynge sholde not speke. And whan they were comen to the palays and were descended from theyr horses, The fader toke his sone by the honde 't lad hym in to the hall and set hym next hym't behelde him and sayde, Say me how it is with your maysters, I how they have enformed you, for now it is many yeres syth I saw you. He enclyned downe his hede I gave none answere. The fader sayd, wherfore speke ye not to me. And whan thempresse herde that themperours sone was comen she was ryght joyous and glad, I sayd I wyl goo to se hym. She apparaylled her with ryche vesture I atyre, I toke with her two of her gentylwymen I went there as ye emperour was syttyge wt his sone she sette her downe by ye chylde. I she sayd to themperour is this your sone yt hath ben nourysshed wt ye seven wyse maysters. I he sayd/ it is my sone / but he speketh not. She sayd, Delyuer to me your sone, I if ever he spake I shall do hym speke. Tho sayd themperour ryse I go wt her. The sone dyde reverence to ye fader, as thoughe he sayd I am redy too accoplysshe your wyll, I went wt her.

Howe thempresse ladde Dioclesyan themperours sone with her in her chamber for to make good chere w^t hym the whiche he withstode.

Thempresse lad hym wt her in to her chamber t commaunded all other to auoyde 't set hym by her afore her bedde, I sayd, O my best beloued dyoclesyan, I have moche of your persone I beaute herde, but now I am glad yt I may se you wt myn eyen that my herte coueyteth t loueth, for I haue caused your fader to sende for you / that I have solace 't joy of your persone. Wherfore I wtout faute gyue you knowledge that I for your loue vnto this daye haue kepte my vyrgynyte. Speke to me I lete vs goo bed togyder. But he gaue her no worde to answer. She seynge that sayd to hym, O good dyoclesyan haue the half of my soule wherfore speke ye not to me / or at ye leest shewe me some token of loue / what shall I do, speke to me. I am redy to fulfyll and perfourme your wyll. It whan she had thus sayd she embraced hym It wold have kyssed hys mouth 't he torned his vysage from her, I in no wyse wolde cosent. Tho sayd she ayen to hym, O sone wherfore do ye thus w' me: beholde there is none y' may se vs lete vs togyder slepe / 't than shall ye well perceyue yt for your loue I have kept my vyrgynyte, and he torned his vysage frome her/. She seynge yt he was of her ashamed shewed vnto hym her naked body and brestes and sayde, beholde my sone what body I have att your wylle, gyue me youre consent or elles it shall be herde for me to passe with my ryght myde. He neyther wt sygne ne wt countenauce of vysage shewed her ony maner of loue, but as much as he coude withdrewe hym from her, wha she sawe yt she sayd, O my moste swete sone yf it please you not to cosent to me ne yet speke, haply for some resonable cause, Lo here is paper pen t ynke yf ye wyl not speke wt your mouth than wryte your wyl yt I ony tyme herafter may trust in your loue or not. The chylde wrote as hereafter followed, O lady god forbede yt I sholde defoule my faders orcheverde, yf I shulde defoul it: I wote not what fruyte I shold have of it. knowe wel one thyge yt I sholde syn in yo syghte of god I I sholde ren in ye maledictyon of my fader, I therfore from hensforth prouoke or styre me no more therto / Whan she had yt cedule seen 't red she brake it w' her teth: 't tare or rent her clothes wt her nayles to her nauyll. It her vysage al to scratched, it was al blody, 't cast from her al ye ornametes of her hede 't cryed wt a loude voyce: come hither my lords t help me afore yt the rude I euvll body shame I rauyssh me.

Howe Thempresse complayned to themperour of the shame to her done by his sone.

The Emperour was in his halle and herde the crye ? noyse of thempresse. he hastely ranne towardes his chambre t his knyghtes and other of his seruauntes followed hym after for to see what there was to [be] done. Tho beganne thempresse to crye and to speke to themperour thus, O my lorde haue pyte and compassyon vpon me, beholde this yonge man is not your sone, but ye foulest rybaude I harlot yt euer was borne, I a defouler of wymmen, for as ye knowe wel I lad and brought hym with me in to my chamber, 't sholde haue exhorted and caused hym to haue spoke. I haue done asmoche therto as I can or may. 't whyles I with my wordes exhorted and meued hym for to haue spoken. he hath endeuoyred hymself with me to have synned. It by cause I wolde not to hym consete, but withstode as moche as I myght for to flee the shame, he my vysage had made all blody, It my vesture and ornamentes of my heed broken I all to torne, as ye may openly se: And yf ye had not so sone comen vnto my callynge / he had accomplysshed in me his mooste foule and worste wyll. whan them-peroure this sawe and herd, fulfylled wt grete malyce 't woodnesse / commaunded his seruauntes that they sholde lede hym to the galowes 't hange hym. And after his lordes herde that sayde / Lorde ye haue no moo but this sone only. It is not good yt ye thus lyghtely putt hym to deth / the lawe is put and ordeyned for transgressours 't mysdoers, and yf it be so that he must edeye, lete hym by ye lawe dye leest that it be sayd yt themperour in his grete furour and Ire without lawe and Justyce he hath put his only sone to dethe. As themperour this herde commaunded him to be put in pryson vnto the tyme that iugement were gyuen ayenst hym. And whan thempresse vnderstode that the chylde was not put to dethe / she cryed 't weped bytterly 't wold have no reste, whan the nyght was comen the Emperour entred in to his chamber to go to bed, and founde his wyfe wepynge I sorowyng. To whome he sayde, O my mooste dere lady / for what cause are ye thus sorowfull. She answered, Knowe ye not how yt your cursed sone hath me thus moche shame done t offended / and ye have commaunded hym too be hanged and yet he lyued / t your worde is not performed ne my shame is not wroken. Tomorowe sayde themperour he shall dye by ye lawe. Then sayd she, shalle he so longe lyue, Thene myght it happen to you as it dyd vpon a burgeys of Rome of whome an example is sayd. The Emperoure sayd, I praye you shewe me that example. That shall I doo gladly sayd the Empresse.

The Fyrst Example of the Empresse.

[In the city of Rome was a Burgess which had a fair Garden, wherein he had a noble Tree, the which every year brought forth fruit of good vertue for whosoever eat thereof that were sick of any manner of sickness or leprosie he should soon be whole and receive his sight It happened on a day, as the Burgess went into his garden to visit the Tree, he espied under the Tree a fair young Imp, and called to him the Gardiner and said: my friend, of this young Imp I give thee charge for I trust of that to plant a better Tree than this is. The Gardiner said: I shall it gladly do. Another time the Burgess came again into his garden to visit the young Plant, and it appeared unto him that it grew not so much as it should do, and he said to the Gardiner: how may this be and he said, it is no wonder, for this great Tree hath so great arms and branches, that the air may not come to the root of the young tree, then said the Burgess, cut and hew off the arms and the boughs, that the air may come thereto. The Gardiner did as he commanded. The Burgess came again another time to see the young plant, and thought that it grew never the better and said to the Gardiner. what is it that letteth this plant not to grow now: and he said, I suppose the height of the Old Tree letteth the Sun, that the rain may not come thereto, and therefore it cannot grow. Then said the Master unto him, hew down that tree to the ground, for I hope of this Plant to have a better than ever this was. The gardyner heryng his mayster obeyed hym, I hewe downe the tree. And as this was done yt yonge plant all holy perysshed and came to nought. wherof came grete harme, for whan yo poore the seke people perceyued yt the tree was so destroyed they cursed all them that were of counseyll 't helpers therto / by the whiche they all afore tyme were heled t cured of theyr infyrmytees & maladyes. Then sayd the Empresse vnderstande ye what I haue sayd. Yes ryghte well. Than sayd she, I shall declare to you what I have sayde.

The Declaratyon of the Example.

This tree mylorde betokeneth your moste noble persone / that with your counseyll and helpe many pore 't seke folke are gretly holpen & conforted. And the yonge ympe that vnder the grete tre is vp growen is your cursed sone that now by his cunnynge begynith to growe and studyeth how he fyrste may the armes and bowes of your myght cutte of / and to wynne too hym the londe t praysynge of the people, and ouer yt he ymagyneth to destroy your person that he may hyselfe reygne. But what shall fall than therof come, all poore and feble people shall curse all them the whiche myght haue destroyed your sone I have not done it / I counseyll you whyles ye are in your power 't helth yt ye destroye hym leste yt the curse of the people fall vpon you. Tho sayde the Emperour, ye haue gyuen me good counseyll. Tomorowe I shall condempne hym to the moost vylest deth that can be thought. Whan ye daye was come / yº Emperour went & sate in Jugemete, & commaunded his seruauntes yt they sholde lede his sone to be hanged wt trompettes blowynge in to kenynge of deth. And as themperours sone was lad throughe the Cyte, the comen people began too wepe 't crye alas ye onely sone of themperour is lad towardes his deth / it therwithal came Pancyllas rydyng vpon a hors ye fyrste mayster. Whan the chylde sawe hym / he bowed his hede to hym, as though he had sayde. Haue mynde vpon me whan ye come afore my fader, se how I am lad towardes the galowes. Than ye may ster sayd to the seruauntes / make no haste, for I hope by the grace of god this day to delyuer hym fro the deth, Then sayde all the people, O good mayster haste you to vo palays and saue your dyscyple. he smote his hors with ye spores tyll he came to the palays I kneled before the Emperour I dyde hym reverence / To whome themperour sayd. It shall neuer be to the good, which answerd I have deserved a better rewarde. The Emperour sayd there lyest yu, for I delyuered to the 't thy felowes my sone well spekynge / in alle thyng well manered, i now he is dompe / 't that wors is, he wolde haue oppressed my wyf, therfore this day he shall dye, 't ye all shall dye a shameful dethe. The mayster sayd, O lord as for your sone yt ye saye that he speketh not, yt knoweth god, 't without a cause it is not as ye shall vnderstande. And that ye saye more yt he your Empresse wolde haue befowled. I shall saye you of a trouth, he hath ben in our company by yo space of xvi yeres 't we neuer coude perceyue suche thinges by hym. And therfore my dere lorde I shall shew you one thynge that yf ye put your sone to deth for yo wordes of your wyfe, it sholde happen too you wors than to a knyght the whiche that kylled his best grey hounde thrugh the wordes of his wyfe whiche saued his sone from yo deth. Tho sayd themperour to yo mayster tell me yo example. The Mayster sayd, Lorde that shall I not do / for afore or I coude make an ende therof your sone myght be dede to thenne in vayne to without fruyte I sholde reherce it, but yf it please you this notable example to here / call ayen her sone tyll to morowe to as ye thynke by reason then do with hym youre pleasure. As themperour that herde anone he lete the chylde too be called ayen to in the meane tyme he sette hym in pryson whyles the mayster sholde fynisshe his tale. And then he beganne to saye in suche maner as folowith.

The Example of the Fyrste Mayster.

There was a valyaunt knyght whiche had oonly one soone as ye haue. The whiche he loued so moche that he ordeyned for his kepynge thre nourysshes, the fyrste sholde gyue hym souke It fede hym, ye seconde sholde wasshe hym I kepe hym clene, yo thirde sholde brynge hym to slepe I to reste. This knyghte had also a greyhounde 't a fawcon yt he also loued ryghte well. The greyhounde was so good yt he neuer ran too noo game but he toke it 't helde it tyl his mayster came. And yf his mayster dysposed hym to go to batayle, yf he sholde not spede in yo batayll / anone as he sholde mounte vpon his horse ye greyhounde wold take the horse tayll in his mouth 't drawe backwarde / t wolde also cry t howle meruaylously loude. By thise sygnes the knyght vnderstode yf that he sholde spede in his iourneye or not. The faucon was so gentyll and so hardy that he was neuer caste of to his praye but he toke it. This same knyght had grete plesure in iustynge t turneynge, so yt vpon a tyme vnder his castell he lete proclame a tornement to the whiche came many good lordes and knyghtes. The knyght entred in to ye tourney, 't his lady went with her maydens to se it. And as they went out after went the nourysshes It lefte the chylde lyenge alone in the cradell in the halle where the greyhounde laye nugh the wall, and yo hauke or faucon standynge vpon a perke. In this halle there was a serpente lurkynge or hydde in a hole, to all them of the castell The whiche wha he felte that they were all absent he put out his hede of his hole. It as he noman sawe but the chylde lyenge in yo cradell, he went out of his cauerne towardes ye cradell for the chylde to have slayne. The noble faucon seynge that, behelde ye grehounde that was slepyge / she made suche a noyse 't rustelynge with her winges or feders' yt the greyhounde awoke and rose vp. and whan he sawe the serpente nyghe the chylde anone avenst hym he lepte / t they bothe faught so long togyder tyll yt the serpente hadde grewously hurted and wounded the greyhounde that he bled sore. soo yt the erthe about the cradell was al be bled with the blode of the greyhounde. The greyhounde whan that he felte hymselfe so greuously hurted and wounded, sterte fyersly vpon the serpente, and faught sore togyder and so egerly, so that betwyne theym the cradell was ouer caste wt the chykle the botome vpwarde. And by (sic) bycause yt the cradell had foure pomelles or fete they saued the chyldes vysage 't his lyfe frome ony hurtyge fallynge towardes the erthe. I what shall I say more. Incontynent therafter with grete payne the greyhounde ouercame t slewe the serpente / I went I layd hym downe ayen in his place I lycked his woundes / and anone after as yo iustes I torneye was done, the nourysshes were the fyrste that came in to ye castell / t as they sawe the cradell reuersed with bloode vppon the erthe enuyronned, and that the greyhounde was also blody, they thought and sayde amonges themselfe that the greyhounde hadde slayne the chylde, and they were not soo wyse as too tourne vppe ayen the cradell with the chylde for too haue seene what was therof befallen. But they sayd / lete vs fle or ren away leest that oure mayster put or laye the blame vpon vs and slee vs. And as they were thus away rennynge / they met wt the knyghtes wyfe, and she sayd to them Wherfore make ye this sorowe t whether wyl ye ren, t they sayde, O lady woo and sorowe be to vs and to you; why what is there happened, shewe me. The grehounde they sayd that our lorde 't mayster loueth soo moche hath deuoured and slayne your sone / ? lyeth by the wall all full of the bloode. As ye lady this herde she fell to the erthe and began to wepe and crye pyteously: 't sayd alas, O my dere sone be ye thus slayne I dede, what shall I nowe make that I have my onely sone thus loste. Herwithall came in the knyght frome the torneye, I beholdyng his lady thus cryenge I makyng sorowe. he demauded her wherfore that she made so grete sorowe and lamentacyon. She answered hym, O my lorde youre greyhounde that ye loue soo moche hath slayne your onely sone, I lyeth by the wal sacyate with bloode of the chylde. The knyght hugely angred went in to the hall, 't the greyhounde went to hym to mete and to fawne as he was wonte to doo. And the knyght drewe out his swerde It with one stroke smote of the houndes heede, and went to ye cradell and founde his sone al hole, and by the cradell the serpente slayne. And by dyuers sygnes perceyued that the hounde 'hadde foughten ayenst the serpent for the saluacyon of ye chylde. Then with grete sorowe t wepyng he tare his here and sayd woo be to me that for the wordes of my wyfe I haue slayne my good greyhounde ye whiche hath saued my chyldes lyfe 't hath slayne the serpente. Herfore I wyll put my selfe to penaunce I brake his swerde in thre peces, and went towardes yo holy londe, I abode there all the dayes of his lyfe. Then sayd yo mayster to themperour, Lorde vnderstande ye what I have sayd. And he answerd and sayde ryght well. The mayster sayd: Yf yt ye do youre sone to dethe for ye wordes of your wyfe, it shall come to you wors than it dyde too the knyght for his greyhounde. The Emperour sayde ye haue shewed me a fayre example, I wtout doute this daye shall not my sone dye. Tho sayd the mayster yf ye do so ye do wysly, but I thanke you that ye have hym spared this daye for my sake:

The Seconde Complayate of the Empresse.

Whan yt thempresse herde yt the chylde was not yet deede, she began to wepe bytterly t sate her downe vpon the erthe in ye asshes t wolde not holde vppe her heed. As themperour that herde he entred in to yo chāber t sayd to her, O good wyfe wherfore make ye all this sorowe t trouble your selfe so moche. She sayd demaunde ye me that knowe ye not well what grete despyte t shame yt I haue suffred of your vnhappy sone, t haue promysed me yt ye shold se instyse oner hy done t yet he lyueth, of trouth it shall hapne too you as it happened vpon a shepeherde and a boore. The emperour sayd, I praye you shewe me that exāple for my lernynge, and she sayd yesterday I shewed one; and I sawe none effecte that therof came, too what entente sholde I now shewe. Neuertheles I shal this notable example telle t declare vnto you / in this maner hereafter folowynge.

The Seconde Example of the Empresse.

There was somtyme an Emperour the whiche had a grete foreste / wherin was a bore yt was so cruell t so fell that all men goynge through the forest he kylled and deuoured. The emperour was therof ryght heuy, and lete to proclame thrugh all his empyre, that who soeuer he was that coude sle the bore sholde haue his oonly doughter too wyfe, It therto his Empyre after his deth. It as this in all places proclamed was there was not one man founde yt durste medle or intromytte. Than was there a shepeherde whyche in hymself thought, myght I this bore sle 't wyne I sholde not only auaunce my self, but also al my generatyon 't kynred. he toke his shepeherdes staf in his honde, and went in to the forest. And as the boore had of hym a syght, he drew hym towardes the herdman, and he for fere clymmed upon a tree. Than the bore began to byte and gnawe the tree / so that the herde thought shortely that he sholde have over throwe it. This tre was laden wt grete plente of fruyte. The herde gadred and plucked therof and cast them to yo boore. In so moche that whan he had fylled hym therwith he put and layde hym downe to slepe. The whiche perceyuynge the herde by lytell & lytell he descended 't with the one hande he clawed the bore, 't with y' other he helde hymselfe on the tre / 't seynge yt the boore slepte soundly I faste, drewe out his knyfe and smote ye bore to ye herte I kylled hy. 't wedded theperours dought' to hys wyf: 't aft' ye deth of her fadr he was made emperour, tho sayd she my lorde wote ye not what I have sayd. He sayd ryght well. Then sayd she, this myghty bore betokeneth your mooste noble persone / ayenst whome maye no man withstande neyther by wysdom ne with strength. This shepherde with hys staffe is the persone of your vngracyous sone, which wt his staff of connyge begynneth to play wt you as ye herdman clawed the bore and made him to slepe 't after kylled hym. In ye same maner yo maysters of your sone by theyr fals fables and narracyons clawe 't glose vnto the tyme that your sone slee you, that he may regne. Tho sayd themperour god forbede yt they sholde doo too me as they dyde to yo bore. It sayd vnto her this day my sone shall be hanged. And she answered yf ye do so ye do wysely. Than themperour yo seconde tyme syttyge in iugement, comaunded to lede hys [son] to ye galowes 't hange hym. And whyles he was govge, the seconde mayster came before themperour doynge hym reuerence as it is before shewed in ye comyge of the fyrste mayster. To whom yo seconde mayster sayd O my lorde themperour yf ye sholde do sle your sone for the wordes of your wyfe, it myghte worst come to you than it dyde to a knyght which for the wordes of his wyfe was vniustly put in a pyller. Themperoure sayd, O good mayster tell me how it hapned. And he sayde my lorde I shall not saye it but yf yt ye will doo call ayen your sone from ye deth ynto the tyme yt thexample be tolde, the whiche yf it tourne you not frome your purpose, your wyll be fulfylled. The emperour comanded yt ye chylde sholde be called ayen. And [after this manner following, the second master began to tell.

[The Example of the Second Master.

[In a City was an ancient Knight, which wedded a young wife and fair, as ye hath done, whom he loved above all earthly things; the knight was a very circumspect and careful husband insomuch that every night he locked the door with his own hands and laid the keys under his Bedshead. In that City was a law or custom, that at a certain hour in the night, a bell was used to be rung, that after the ringing of the said bell, if any man or woman were by the watch-men found about the streets, all that night they should be kept in prison, and on the morrow set upon the Pillory, that all people might behold them.

[The said Knight had little lust of fleshly deeds, for he was very old, and might not satiate or perform the desires and appetites of his young wife; wherefore every night she having a Paramour, her Husband sleeping, took the keys from under his Beds-head, and went to her love; and when she came again, laid the keys under her husband's head; and thus they played many a time.

[It happened upon a night that the knight awaked from his sleep, and missed his wife, and the keys and his Beds-head. whereupon he rose up and went unto the doors, and found them open, the which he bolted fast within, and went up again into his chamber, and looked out of the window towards the street: and when it was near the third cocks crow, his wife came from her best beloved, and found the door shut and bolted within: then was she] sorowfull, neuerthelesse she knocked to have The spake the knyght out of the wyndowe. O y'' moste euyll & vnclene wyfe, now I knowe & am experte that many a tyme ye haue forsaken my bedde 't gone and done auoutrye, now shall ye stande tyll the bel be rongen and yt the wakers may take you and doo with you according to the lawe. The wyfe answered, My lorde wherfore lay ye that to me. In trouth I shall saye you I was called by my moders mayden I fetched in the nyght, I whan I sawe that ye slepte so swetely I durste not awake you bycause that ye are olde, and therfore I toke yo keyes 't went to my moder the whyche is sore seke, that I fere too morowe she must bee anounted or aneeled notwithstandyng for that I sholde not you offende or dysplease I haue hasted me ayen to you I haue lefte her lyenge in grete payne 't infyrmyte. Therfore I pray you for the loue of god lete me in afore the bel be rongen. The knyght answered So shall ye not come in, ye muste there abyde vnto the tyme that the bell be rongen, I tyll that ye wakers come and take you. The she sayde that sholde be to you I to me: to all our frendes & kynred a grete shame and rebuke. Therfore atte the reuerence of almyghty god lete me come in. Than sayd he, Haue in thy myde euil and false wyfe how oftentymes ye haue forsaken my bedde and doone auoutrye. It is moche better that ye suffer shame and beewayle for youre synnes here in this worlde, thanne for too suffer payne in helle. She sayd ayen to hỹ I praye you for the loue of hỹ yt was crucyfyed 't dyed vpon the crosse haue mercy vpon me. The knyght answered, ye laboure all in vayn for ye shall not come in, but ye shall tary the comynge the wakers. As she herde that, she sayde my lorde ye knowe well that by this dore standyth a well, yf ye lete me not come in I shall therin drowne my selfe, rather thanne all my frendes sholde be shamed for me. Thene sayd he, wolde god yt ye had be drowned long afore or ye in my bedde came. And as they thus spake togyder, yo mone went down 't was al derke. Tho sayde she, yf it wyll none otherwyse be I shal drowne miselfe, but yet afore as a trewe crysten woman I wylle make my testament. Fyrst I bequethe to god t to oure lady my soule, my body too be buryed in ye chyrche of saynt Peter I of all other thyges I goodes yt god hath sent me, I gyue vnto you to dyspose for my soule after your wysdome I dyscrecyon, I whan she had thus sayd, she went to the well, I a grete stone ther beynge wt bothe her armes she lyfte vp 't sayd, Nowe I drowne myselfe, I caste ye stone downe in to the well It went aven pryuely and stode by the dore. The knyghte herynge that noyse cryed wt a lowde voyce saynge / alas alas

my wyfe is drowned, and hastely came downe and rane to the well. And whan she sawe that the dore was open, anone she entred and locked and made faste yo vate / 't went vp to yo chamber I laye I loked out of ye wyndowe. The knyghte stode by yo welle 't cryed and wepte bytterly and sayd, woo be to me I have now loste my moost beloved wyfe, cursed be the tyme that I made faste the dore avenst her. The lady herde that 't sayd, O ye cursed olde grysarde, why stade ye there this tyme on ye nyght, was not my body to you suffycyent, wherfore goo ye thus every nyghte, out to your harlottes t hores and leue my bed. As he herde the voyce of his wyfe he was ryght gladde and sayd Blessed be god that yet she is not drowned. But my good lady wherfore lave ye suche thynges avenst me. I thoughte to have chastysed you, and therfore I locked the dore. But in no wyse I entended your peryl / ye knowe well whatte sorowe I made for you whan I herde you to have fallen in the well, 't therfore I came lyghtly to have holpen you. Therupon she sayde, falsly ye lye. I neuer dyde suche thinges as ye laye to me. But it appereth by a comyn prouerbe, he''y' is defectyfe or culpable hymself in a synne, he iugeth euery man to be in the same, or elles y' fader soughte neuer his sone in ye ouen: but yf he had ben therin hyselfe. And therfore ye put that to me y' ye yourselfe haue oftentymes done it vsed but one thynge I promys you, ye shall abyde there tyll yo wakers come, it that yo bell be rongen that they may lede you before you iuges to abyde t suffer the law. Tho sayd the knyght, wherfore lave ye suche thynges too me / I am olde 't all my lyfe dayes I have ben conversaunt in this cyte, It in this was I neuer dyffamed, I therfore lete me in that to me ne to your self ye do no shame. She sayd, ye speke in vayne. It is better that ye forthynke your synes in this worlde than in hell. Haue in mynde what the wyse man sayth. A poore man proude, A ryche man a lyer, An olde man a fole god hatyth. So ye be a lyer and ryche. what nede was it too you for too lye vpon me. And ye are a fole, for ye had yo floure of my youth at your pleasure, and yet ye muste renne to hoores 't harlottes. And therfore it is a grete grace of god that ye haue tyme and space too forthynke it, leste that ye sholde perysshe and be dampned for eurmore. It for yt suffre your penaunce pacyently. Tho knyght sayd, O my best and well beloued lady all though it be so, yet is god mercyfull, and he asketh noo thynge of a synner, but he amende his lyfe and forthynke and doo penaunce for his synnes. Nowe lete me come in and I wyll make amendes, She sayde, Whiche deuyll hath made you so good a prechour, So come ye not in. And as they thus spake the bell was rongen / ye knyght herynge that sayd, O my mooste dere lady the bell ryngeth now, suffer me to come in that I be not ashamed for euer. whiche answered, yo ryngyge of the bell pretendeth the helthe of youre soule take it pacyently in your penauce. And as this was sayd come ye wakers yt aboute the cyte went 't founde the knyght standynge in ye strete I sayd to hym, O good man it is not gode yt ye in this houre of younght stande here. And as she herde the voyce of ye wakers / she sayd, Good felowes venge me on yt olde cursed horehunter 't rybaude, for ye knowe whose doughter and what I am. This cursed olde man is wont euery nyght to leve my bed, I gothe to his hoores I harlottes. longe forborne hym and wolde not shewe it ne complayne vpon hym too my frendes, for I trusted that he wolde have ameded his mysrule, I it helpeth not. And therfore take hym I punysshe hym after the lawe, yt all suche olde dotardes may take example by hym. Then yo wakers toke hym and all nyght chastysed hym in pryson. It on yo morne they put hym on ye pyllery. Tho sayd to the Emperoure, Lorde haue ye understonde what I have sayd it he sayd ryght well. Tho sayd yo mayster, yf ye put to dethe your sone by yo excytacyon of your wyfe, it shall to you worse come than it dyd to ye knyght. The Emperour sayd she was the worste woman yt euer I herde of that so falsely her husbande brought to shame I rebuke. I say to you mayster yt for yo reason of this example, my sone shall this daye not dye. The mayster sayd to hym, yf ye do so than do ye wysely. And yt herafter ye shall ioye, A I commende you to god / I thanke you of your pacyent herynge / and of the sparynge of your sone and so he departed.

The Thyrd Complaynte of the Empresse.

Whan thempresse herde yt the chylde was not dede she wepte bytterly I entred in to her preuy chamber / I tare her skyn wt her nayles, it wt loude voyce cryed and sayd alas yt euer I was borne, 't yt I soo grete a kynges doughter sholde thus be intreated I shamed and therof can have no remedy. Her gētilwymen this heryg wet I shewed it to theperour. I he went vnto her 't comforted her saying O lady wepe not so ne cry not, for it becometh you no thynge / whiche sayd / the loue that I have I owe to you maketh me more to sorowe than the contempte of the dede. for why the inwarde loue of your herte hath hytherto prohybite I letted me yt I haue not retorned ayen in to my countree to my fader but I fere yf I sholde so do to you it myght do harme for he is myghty to honoure me wt rychesses, and too venge my quarell 't despyte in such wyse yt ye 't youres myght forthynke it Therto sayd themperour lete that goo out of your mynde, shewe it not / for as long as I lyue I shall neuer fayle you. And she sayd / lorde I praye god that ye maye longe lyue. But I fere me y^t it shall hapen vpon you as it dyde of a knyght and of his sone that wolde not burye his faders hede in the chyrcheyerde, and yet his fader was for hym slayne /. Than sayd themperour Shewe me y^t example, how that was that he wolde not burye his faders heede / she sayd I shall do it to your proufyte.

The Thyrde Example of the Empresse.

There was in the cyte of rome a knyghte yt had two doughters t one sone. this knyghte hadde so grete delyte in hauntinge iustynge and turneynge that all thynge that he myght wynne I gete he layde it and spente it therupon. In that tyme was an emperour named Octauyan, whiche in rychesse of golde 't syluer exceded al other kynges and prynces in so moche that he had a toure full of golde, and ordeyned a knyght to haue ye kepynge 't charge therof. This knyghte that so haunted iustynge I other ydell games came to so grete pouerte that he was dysposed to sel his herytage, I called to hym his sone and sayd. My sone it behoueth me of your counseyll, for necessyte and pouerte compelleth me to sell myn herytage, or elles for to fynde an other way by the whiche I maye lyue, for yf I sholde sell myn heritage ye 't your systers sholde perysshe. The sone sayde, fader yf ye can fynde ony other meane without sellynge of the herytage, I sholde be redy to helpe you. To whome ye fader sayd I am bethought vpon a good counseyll. Themperour hath a toure full of golde / by nyght tyme lete ys go thyder with instrumentes and dygge and hewe through the toure, and lete vs take of the golde as moche as shal suffyse us. Therto answered the sone 't sayd, that couseyl can not be amended, for it is better of themperoures golde to take to helpe vs than our herytage to sell. They rose vp bothe in a nyght and went to the toure and with instrumentes they made there thrugh an hole, and toke as moche golde as they bothe coude cary away at that tyme. The knyght payed his dettes t haunted ayen iustes as he dyde before tyll all was spete and consumed. In the meane whyle the keper of ye tresoure went in to the toure I whan he saw the tresourc stolen, I a grete hole made through the wall, he began to waxe sore aferde ? went to themperour and shewed how it was befallen. whome themperour sayd all angrely, what nedest yu to shewe that have I not delyuered to the my tresoure / I therfore of the I will aske it. Tho anone as the keper herde that went to the toure ayen, 't set afore the hole a grete vessel ful of pytche medled with other gummes so subtely, that noo man myght come in at that hole but that he must nedes fall into that vessell, I yf he therin fyll he coude no more come out of it. Not longe after the knyghte had all the golde consumed and spent I went ayen with his sone to the toure to stele more golde. And as the fader went in fyrste, anone he was fallen in ye vessel with pytche to the necke. I whan he saw that he was taken and coude not gete out he sayd to his sone, follow me not, for yf thou doost thou may not escape to be taken. you sone sayd, god defende it y' I sholde not helpe you: for yf ye are founden we are all but dede, it yf that ye may not be holpen by me, I shall seke counseyll how that ye may be The fader sayd / there is none other delyuered 't holpen. counseyll, but with thy swerde smyte of myne heed / and as my body is founde without hede, noo man shall knowe me. I so yu and my doughters may escape 't auoyde this wordly shame 't The sone sayde, Fader ye have gyuen ye best coun-For yf it were so that ony man myght perceyue ony knolege of you, none of vs sholde escape ye deth 't therfore it is expedient that your hede be smyten of. Anone he drewe out his swerde it smote of his faders hede it caste it into a pytte. I afterwarde hyd it therin and yede and shewed to his systers all the mater, whiche many dayes after pryuely bewayled the dethe of theyr fader. After this yo keper of yo tresour came in to the toure I founde a body wtout ony hede. whereof he wondred sore, and shewed it to yo emperour To whome he sayde, bynde that body at the tayle of an horse t so drawe it by al the stretes of the cyte, 't dyligently take good hede yf ye here ony crye or wepynge. wheresoo euer ye here that he is lorde of the house, take all them 't w' the body drawe them to the The whiche themperours seruauntes galowes 't hange them fulfylled accordinge to his comaudemet. And as they came avenst the house of the dede knyght, 't as the doughters sawe body of theyre dede fader, they made a merueylous grete shryche

It wept pyteously It as ther broder that herd, anone he wounded hymself greuously in the mouthe with a knyfe, so that grete plente of bloode came oute of the wounde. The offycers whan the herde that noyse It crye entred in to the house, and demaunded the cause of theyr noyse It clamour. Tho answered the sone that I am thus wounded, for whan my systers sawe my bloode so habundauntly go oute as ye see, they began to wepe and crye. And whan the offycers sawe the wounde they byleued his wordes, It so dysceyued went theyr wayes, and hynge (sic) the body of the knyght vpon the galowes where it hynge long tyme It his sone wolde neyther take his body downe frome the galowes, ne yet bury his hede. y Empresse sayd vnderstande ye what I haue sayd. Themperour sayd ye ryght well.

Tho spake thempresse, thus my lorde I fere me it shalbe of you't of your sone. This knyght for love of his sone was made poore. I fyrste he commytted thefte I brake the toure, secondary dyde hymself too be heded, that his chyldren sholde haue no shame. After ye sone cast his hede in a dyke, I buryed it nether in chyrche nor in chyrcheyerde, his body he suffred to hange styll vpon the galowes, yf that he coude not haue taken it downe in the daye he myght wel haue done in ye nyght. In the same maner ye laboure nyght and day that ye maye promote your sone to honoure I ryches. But without doubte he dayly laboureth for your confusyon t destructyon that he may regne after you in your empyre. Therfore I aduyse you y' ye do hỹ to be hanged before or he you destroye. perour sayd ye haue shewed me a good example. The knyghtes sone whan he had smyten of his faders hede wolde not bury it. Without doute my [son] fader (sic) shall not do so by me, but he communded (sic) anone his offycers that they sholde lede hym to the galowes. It they obeyed his comandement hastely. It as they lad hym thrugh the stretes yo people made grete noyse & lamentacyon, alas alas the onely sone of the emperour is lad ayen towardes ye galowes / 't as they thus ladde hym the thyrde mayster named Craton came rydyg vpon an hors / t as ye chylde sawe hym he bowed downe his hede to hym as though he had sayd, haue mynde vpon me. The pepole cryed saying, O good mayster hast you't saue youre dyscyple. He smote his horse wt spores t haysted him to ye palays. And whan he came before themperoure he honourably salued hym, whiche sayd, thy comyng hyther shall neuer auayll the / nor it that yu comest for. The mayster sayd, I hoped in my comynge to haue be welcome I haue had a better rewarde I not too haue be rebuked. The emperour sayd / as ye haue deserued so shal it be to you. To whom he sayd, my lord what haue I deserued. Themperour sayde, ye have ryghte well deserved deth, for why I delyuered to you my sone well spekynge 't wel manered for to enfourme and teche, 't ye have delyuered hym ayen too me dompe 't a rybaude. To whom the mayster sayd / in that ye say he is dompe yt I commytte to god / for he maketh the dompe to speke 't the defe to here. But in that ye saye yt he wolde haue your wyfe enforced that wolde I gladly knowe yf ony creature haue yt seen, for there is no malyce aboue ye malyce of a woman / and that shall I proue by a good example that wymen are full of lesyges & decepcons, & yf ye put to deth your sone for the wordes of your wyfe / it shall happen to you as it dyd to a noble man of his wyfe I of his pye, the whiche he loued merueylously. To whome themperour sayd, you tell me how that wymmen are full of malyce I lesynges / whiche sayd I wyll not do it / but yf ye fyrst calle ayen your sone frome the dethe, I then at youre pleasure I shall shewe thexample. Than themperour anone made the chylde too be called ayen and put in pryson. Than the mayster began to say this example in this fourme followynge.

The Example of the Thyrde Mayster.

There was in a cyte a ryche burgeys that had a pye the which he loued so moche yt euery day he taught her to speke. latyn 't hebrewe. And whan yt she had lerned perfetly to speke those two langages / all yt she sawe therde, she shewed It tolde to her mayster. This good man had a fayre yonge wyfe as ye haue / the whiche he loued moche, but she contrary loued not hym / bycause he myght not furnysshe her of such pleasures I lustes as she desyred to haue. And therfore had she an other fayre yonge man that she loued aboue her husbode. And alwayes as her husbonde was out of the towne about his marchaundyse I other besynesses to do, and she sent for her best beloued yt they myght togyder make good chere. The pye as she that sawe tolde it to her mayster, at his home comyng, in such wyse that ye noyse ranne all ouer the cyte of her aduoutry, wherof her husbode many tyme brauled t chydde her. She answered hy, ye beleue your cursed pye, whiche as longe as she lyueth shall alwayes make betwix us varyaunce I dyscorde. And he sayd the pye can not lye, for that she seeth I hereth that she telleth me, and therfore I beleue her more than you. It fortuned that the good, man went in to ferre coutrees to do his marchaudyse, I as sone as was gone his wyfe sent for her frende t loue to solace t make good chere wt hv. but he durst not come by day lyght. but abode to ye euenynge leste that he sholde be seen 't marked of ye peple. And as ye nyght was comen / he knocked at yo gate: 't she was redy 't opened it I sayd, Go in frely for no man shall see you. I he sayd I fere me yt the cursed pye shall accuse vs, for by her is comen grete sclaundre vpon vs through out all the cyte. Entre in she sayd boldely and fere not. And as he sholde passe through ye halle where the pye was in her cage, she herd hym say thyse wordes. O my moste beloued I fere me gretely of ye pye that she shal bewraye vs. And as the wyfe herde that she sayde, Be styll foole, it is derke she may not se you. Thene yo py that herynge sayde, If I se the not I here thy voyce, I thou doost wrong to my mayster, for yu slepest with my maystresse, and whane my mayster cometh I shall tell hym. The yonge man herynge that sayd, Tolde I not you yt the pye sholde dyscouer vs. And yo wyfe sayd fere not for this nyght we shall be auenged vpon the pye. And entred in to ye chamber I slepte togyder that nyght. About mydnyghte the wyfe arose, It called to her a mayden and sayde / fetche me a ladder It set vp too yo rofe of yo house yt I may wreke me on the pye. The mayde dyde so and they bothe went vp t made an hole through the coueryng of ye house ryght ouer the pye / and there thrugh caste sande clay stones I water upon the pye, somoch that the poore"pye was nere dede 't on the morne the yonge man went erly out at a backe dore. And whan the good man was comen home as his custume was he went 't vysyted his pye and sayd to her, O pye my welbeloued byrde / say me howe yu haste fared the whiles that I have been out. She sayd, mayster I shall tel you tydynges that I haue herde. your wyfe as sone as ye were gone by the nyght tyme she lete a man come in and as I that herde I tolde hym yt I wolde shewe it to you at your comynge home / that not withstondynge she lad hym in to your chamber, 't slepte with hy al nyght. ye demaunded me also howe yt I have done in your absence. And I saye you of a trouth that I was neuer so nygh my deth as I was that same nyght wt snowe hayle t rayne yt fyll vpon my body, so longe durvge that I was almoste left for dede. The wyfe wha she herde that sayd too her husbonde, Syr ye byleue your pye now may ye here what she sayth / she coplaynyth yt in ye same nyght there fyll so moche snowe hayle 't rayne vpon her yt she was almost dede, I yet ther was none of the al that same nyght, for ther was not in a yere a fayrer ne a clerer nyght than it was 't therfore from hensforth byleue her not. Tho went ye good man to his neyghbours 't demauded of them yf yt nyght were ony tempest or rayne. They answered yt some of them had waked all ye nyght, 't in all yt yere they had not sene a fayrer nyght. Tho went he to his house 't sayd to his wyfe, I haue fouden you in yo trouth for yo nyght was fayr 't clere as I vnderstonde of your neighbours. ye may now knowe of a trouth sayd she yt py is a lyer. wt her lesyges she hath sowen It made discorde betwix vs. It ouer that I am diffamed thrugh ye cite by her fals lesyngs. than ye burgeys went to ye pye t sayd wherfore haste y" made lyes 't fals tales betwix me 't my wyfe. Is this ye thake that I have for ye mete that I was wont to gyue ye wt myn owne hodes euery day t haste also therby my wyfe brought in to grete dyffamacyon thrugh al the towne. The pye answered, god knoweth yt I can not lye for that I sawe 't herde yt haue I shewed to you. Than sayd he, yn lyest. Haste thou not sayd vnto me that in ye same nyghte was hayle It snowe I rayne that y haddest nerehonde loste thy lyfe whiche is false. And therfore from hensforth yu shalt make no mo lesynges ne dyscorde betwix me and my wyfe / 't toke ye pye and brake her necke. As the wyfe sawe that she was ryght glad I sayd now haue ye done well, now maye we all our lyue dayes lyue in reste & peas. And whan he had slayne ye pye, he loked up I sawe in the top of ye house a laddre I a vessel wt water, sand 't stones. and as he that behelde, he perceyued the falshede of his wyfe, and cryed with a loude voyce, Woo be too me that for my wyues wordes I haue my pye slayne and all my solace and iove loste. yo why (sic) the in all thynges sayd to me trouthe. And as he had thus doone anone for sorowe lefte his marchaundyse and all his house and went to wardes the holy londe, and neuer retorned ayen towardes his wyfe.

the mayster sayd to themperour, Syr haue ye vnderstande what I haue sayd. he answered ryght well. the mayster sayd, was not y't a false 't cursed wyfe y't so by her lesynges caused y't pye for to be slayne. The emperour sayd, In trouthe she was full of falsenesse. I forthynke gretly the pye, the whiche for her true saynge lost her lyfe Verely I say to you y't ye haue tolde me a fayr example therfore th[i]s day my sone shal not dy. Tho sayd the master, Syr yf ye do so ye do wysely, 't I thake you that ye haue spared your sone, this day for my wyll, and to god I commende you.

The Fourth Complaynte of the Empresse.

Whan thempresse herde that yo chylde was not yet dede, she made grete noyse & cryenges in such wyse that she was herde thrugh the palays 't sayd, Woo be to me that euer I was made Empresse, wolde god I had dyed whan I was broughte in too thyse partyes. whan the emperour herde yo noyse I crye that she made, he entred in to the chamber, 't conforted her as moche as he myght I demaunded the cause of her lamentacyon / whiche sayd, O myn owne lorde haue no wonder though that I be in this grete sorowe and agony for I am your wyfe, I in your company by your sone I am shamed as ye sawe me lately all be bled I scratched. I ye have promysed me that he sholde therfor be hanged / t yet he lyueth. wherfore sholde I not sorow. Themperour answered be content t pleased / and I shall do iustyse vpon my sone to morowe. But in that I forbare hym yesterday was at the meuyng of one of the maysters by an example Than sayd she, Haue ye forboren to do iustyce for one worde, were it soo for all the worlde ye sholde not let to do iustyce / ? ye saye for the example of one mayster ye haue lefte it. I fere me it shall happen with you ? wt youre maysters as vpon a tyme it fortuned too an Emperoure with his seuen wyse maysters. The empereoure (sic) sayde I praye you tell me that example. She sayd.

To what entent sholde I laboure in vayne / for yesterdaye I shewed you a good example and it auayled not, for whatsomeuer I shewe for youre honoure and proufyte that the maysters of your sone torne vp and downe to your destructyon, as in this present example I shall clerely shewe you. To whome themperour sayd O my best beloued lady tell me that example, that by the same I maye the better beware / for though that I respyted my sones lyfe for one daye / I shall not therfore gyue hym his lyfe / for that is dyfferred / it is not therfore auferred. And she saide, gladly I shall shewe it for your proufyte, and began to tell it as here after followeth.

The Fourthe Example of the Empresse.

Somtyme was in the cyte of rome seuen wyse maysters by whome all ye empyre was gouerned 't ruled. And themperour that than was dyde no thynge or attempte wtout the counseyll of them, as they vnderstode that themperour was to them soo inclyned, yt without theym he sholde ordeyne or doo noo thynge. in ye meane tyme they made by theyr arte and connyg yt themperour sholde clerely se as longe as he was in his palays but anone as he was out of his palays, he was made blynde / ? that dyde they to the entent yt they myght the more frely intromytte themself of all thynges that apperteyned to themperour, by ye whiche they gate 't wanne too theym grete profyte I lucre of goodes. It after that they had made I wroughte that experyment, they coude neuer chaunge it ne fordo it, afterwarde, but themperour abode styl blyd many yeres. the vii maysters made 't ordeyned throughout thempyre, that yf ony man had dremed a dreme he sholde come vnto them wt a florene of golde or of syluer, 't they sholde expowne 't declare vnto them the Interpretacyon of theyr dremes wherby ?t by other vniuste meanes they obteyned moche more substaunce L money of yo people than themperour dyde. Soo vpon a tyme whan he sate at the table wt the empresse he began to syghe ? sorowe in hymselfe. and whan she perceyued that she enquyred dylygently of hym yo cause of his heuynesse I doloure. Themperour sayde / sholde not that to me be heuy t sorowfull yt I so longe haue been blynde t out of my palays / t of yt can haue or fynde no remedy. To whome spake thempresse I sayd, my lorde here my counseyll I it shall neuer repent you yf ye do therafter. In your courte ye haue vii wyse maysters by whome ye I all ye empyre is gouerned yf ye nowe beholde I marke this in your myde / ye shall fynde that they are ye cause of your blyndnesse I dysease. It yf it be so they are worthy too dye a shamefull deth. Therfore take hede to my couseyl and aduyse. Sende ye for them I shewe vnto them youre dysease I infyrmyte, 't threte them on payne of theyr lyues, yt they sholde fynde a remedy to make you hole of your syknesse I blyndnes. This couseyl pleased the emperour well. It anone sent for ye maysters And wha they were come, themperour anone shewed vnto them his infyrmyte I blyndenes. I charge them vpon payne [of] deth / yt they sholde seke a rememedy (sic) 't make hym hole therof. Tho answered they, Ye desyre of vs a thinge that is dyffusyfe I harde for vs to do thus shortly but gyue vs respyte I dayes I in ye tenth day we shall gyue you answere. Themperour was therwith well content I pleased. Then ye seuen wyse maysters went to counseyll, how they myght yt best chaunge I alter / I that in noo maner coude they fynde ye meane howe they myght put awaye ye blyndnes from the Emperour. Wherfore they were all ryght sorowfull. It sayde amonge them self, wtoute we fynde a remedye we are all but dede men. Soo went they from thens thrugh out al thepyre I sought yf they coude fynde ony remedy or couseyll therfore. It hapned them upon a tyme goynge thrugh a cyte, 't in ye myddes therof they founde chyldren playnge. It a[f]ter them came a man wt a talente or florene of golde 't sayd to them, Good maysters this nyght I haue dremed a dreme, thenterpretacon therof I wolde fayne knowe. Wherfore I pray you shewe me what it sygnyfyeth 't take this golde to you. That herde one of ye chyldren yt played among ye other I sayd too hym, gyue me ye golde I not them, I I shall expowne thy dreme. The man sayde, I dremed this nyghte yt in the myddes of myn orchyerde was a grete sprynge of water, wherof came many smal sprynges yt all myn orchyerde was full 't overflowen w' water. The chylde sayd, take a spade 't dygge in ye same place there as ye thought that ye water outsprange, I there shall ye fynde an horde of golde so grete that ye t all your chylderne & lynage shall be for euer ryche. The man dyde as ye chylde had shewed hym I found ye tresoure accordynge to hys wordes. Tho went ye man to ye chylde 't offred hym a pounde weyght of yo golde yt he had founde for ye interpretacyon of his dreme t he wold none receyue but comytted hym to ye prayers of ye man. The vii.

maysters whan they herde yo chylde so wysely expowne yo dreme, they sayd to hym, gode chylde what is your name he answered t sayde I called Merlyne. Then sayd ye maysters, we se clerely grete wysedome in you, we shal shewe vnto you a grete mater, 't of y' we wolde gladly y' ye coude fynde a remedy. The chylde sayd, shewe me your mater. And they sayd themperour of rome as longe as he is in his palays he hath his syght clere w'out ony impedymët and as sone as he is gone out of his palays he is soo blyde yt he may not se. Yf ye can now determyne ye cause herof 't fynde a remedy yt he may be eased It have h[i]s syght ayen ye shall have grete rewardes I honoures of the perour. The chylde sayd, I know ye cause as wel of his blydhede as of ye remedy. They sayd to hym, Come wt vs to themperour 't ye shall be rewarded so largely yt ye shall be pleased. To whome ye chylde sayd, I am redy to go wt you. And whan they came wt ye chylde before themperour they sayd to hym. Lorde loo here this childe yt we have brought afore you yo which shal fulfyll your desyre as touchyge the cause of your blydenes as ye recoueryge of your syghte. Themperour sayd, Good maysters woll ye take it vpon you't abyde therby that yo chylde shall do wt me. They all sayd ye, for we be experte Themperour torned hymself towardes ye in his wysedome. chylde and sayde, wyll ye vndertake to tell me the cause of my blindnesse t the remedye. The chylde answered t sayd, my lorde the emperour lede me in to your bedchamber, I there I shal shewe you what is to be done And as he was therin broughte he sayd to ye seruautes, take of ye clothes of the bedde, I all thapparayle, 't ye shall se wonders. And as yt was done they sawe a well smokyng yt had vii spryges or floodes, the whiche whan the perour sawe meruayled gretly. ye chyld sayd ye se this wel't wtout it be queched ye shal neuer haue your sygt. theperour sayd, how may yt be. ye chyld sayd, but by one way. Themperour sayde, Shewe vs than the meane, I yf it be possyble to me it shall be done, yt I maye recouer ayen my syght as well wtout as win. To whome the chylde sayd my lorde ye vii. sprynges of this well are thyse vii. wyse maysters, ye whiche you I your Empyre hythertoo haue trayterously gouerned I haue you made blyde as ye be wtoute your palays yt they youre subgettes by extorcyon myght plucke I pyll, ye not seynge, but nowe they knowe not ye remedy. Here ye nowe my counseyll. It this well shal be quenched I extyncte. do stryke of yo fyrste maysters hede I anone ye shall ye fyrste sprynge quenched. I so by ordre one after an other, tyll yt they are all beheded, I anone all the sprynges wt the well shall be vanysshed and gone awaye / t ye shall haue ayen your syght as ye had afore. And as this was done 't fulfylled / the well with the vii. sprynges were vanysshed. And as themperour had his syghte ayen he made the chylde a grete lorde I gaue hym grete habundauce of goodes. After that spake theinpresse, my lorde haue ye this example well perceyued that I have tolde you. It he sayd ye in the best wyse. ye haue recyted a good and a ryall example. Than sayd she, In the same wyse your vii. wyse maysters intende too doo with you, by theyre false narracyons, that your sone may reygne vpon you / that god forbede.

The Declaratyon of the Example.

This welle is youre sone wherof oute flowen seuen sprynges, that sygnefye the seuen wyse maysters the whiche soone ye maye not destroye withoute the vii. maysters be made feble t broughte too noughte that done this well that is your sone wt all his cauyllacyons 't wyles shal not scape / but lete hym be hanged fyrste leste that he haue helpe of his maysters / 't forth after cos n sequently your in maysters. And so ye shall gouerne t guyde your empyre in reste t peas. Themperour anone comaunded his seruauntes to lede his son to the galowes / whiche they were lothe to do. So was there than a grete multytude of people gadred with grete noyse t bewaylynge so that the noyse came to ye eres of ye fourth mayster named Malquydrac. ye whiche lepte vpon his hors / t hasted hym to ye palays. So mette wt hym his dyscyple t dyde reuerence to hym / t recommaunded hym vnto hym / t whan he came before themperour I had done his obeysaunce I reuerence as apperteyned. Themperour answered t sayde. Lytell thanke haue ye olde cursed caytyfe for ye techyge of my sone for I delyuered you my sone well spekyge 't in all thynge ryght vertuous. And ye haue sent hym a fole dompe / t a rybaude / for he wolde haue belayne wt force my wyfe / 't therfore all ye with him togyder shall be hanged. Tho sayd ye mayster, My lorde I have not that deserued of you. god knoweth why your sone speketh not. in shorte tyme ye shal perceyue other thyges. but ye tyme is not yet comen. But in yt ye say he wolde haue oppressed your wyfe, yt is not gospel ne proued, ne for one synguler p[er]sone ye shold not iuge to deth your sone. yf now for ye wordes of your wyfe ye iuge your sone to dye, it wil be wors to you than to an olde man of his wyfe. It that I shall proue. Too whome themperour sayd, Thynke ye to doo with me ye olde dotarde, as somtyme seuen wyse men dyde to an emperour. Therto sayd ye mayster The offence or trespace of one or yet of twenty, may not founde to the rebuke it blame of all other, for ouer al the worlde there bee bothe good 't euyll. But one thynge of a trouth I shall shewe you, that euyll shall come to you yf ye this daye do your sone to deth for the wordes of your wyfe. the whiche I wolde shewe by a notable example. Than sayd the emperoure woll ye that recyte for our lernynge. The mayster sayde, Yf ye wyll calle ayen your sone, I kepe hym tyll I haue made recytacyon of the example. It than what someuer ye shall thinke best to done with hym, doo it. I shall reherce this example or elles not. The emperour comaunded that he sholde be called ayen and desyred the mayster to say as here after ensueth or foloweth.

The Example of the Fourthe Mayster.

There was an olde knyght 't a ryght wyse man that longe lyued without wyfe & chylde. His frendes came to hym many tymes 't counseyled and exhorted him that he sholde take a wyfe. The knyght thus counseyled I styred by his frendes soo oftymes that at the laste he agreed too theym. And they gaue hym to wyfe the doughter of the prouost of rome that ryche was 't ryght fayre, whome whan he had seene anone he was made blynde I taken in her loue, I began to loue her meruaylously wel and whan they had ben a certayne space togyder It had no fruyte ne chylde. Upon a tyme in a mornynge it happened that she went to the chyrche where she met wt her moder, 't saluted her as it behoued. My dere doughter sayd the moder how pleaseth you your maryage 't your husbode: she sayd ryght euyll, for ye haue gyuen to me an olde lame man / me in al thyges dysplcasynge. I wolde ye had that same tyme buryed me, for I had leuer lye tete with a swyne than with hym, and therfore I may no longer thus endure, but I must loue another Tho sayd yo moder, god forbede that My dere doughter howe longe tyme I have be with your fader t yet hytherto I neuer medled me with suche folysshenes. doughter sayde, moder it is noo meruayle for ye bothe in your youth met togyder, I the one toke solace of the other, I may recevue of hym noo maner of solace corporall for he is colde / 't vpon yo bed he lyeth as styll as a stone, or as a thyng immouable: The moder answered, yf ye wyll loue another say me what he is. The doughter sayd a preest I wyl loue. to whome you moder sayd it were better to you t lesse syn to loue a knyght or a squyer than a preest. It the doughter sayde, If I shold loue a knyght or a gentel squyer in shorte tyme he wolde be wery of me, I after ythe wolde do me shame I tell it ouer all, I so it is not of the preest, for he wyll holde and kepe his owne honoure t counseyll as well as myn, And also spyrytuell men be more true to theyr loues than the seculer men. The moder sayd, Here my counseyll ? it shall be good for Olde folkes are wylly 't fell, tempte your husbonde fyrst 't yf ye scape hym wtout doynge ony harme or smytyge, than loue the preest. The doughter sayd I maye not so longe abyde. The moder sayd vpon my blessynge abyde tyll ye haue proued hym. The doughter sayde vpon your blessynge I wyll abyde so longe, tyll I have attempted hym but fyrst say me how that I shal proue hym. The moder sayde, He hath in his orchyerde a tree whiche he loueth moche, do yt to be smyten downe whyles he is oute at hontynge. It ayenst his comynge make hym there a fyre, 't yf he forgyue it you tha maye surely loue the preest. As she had herde the couseyl of her moder she went to her house. To whom her husbonde sayd, Where haue ye ben so longe. She answered I haue ben in the chyrche where as I met wt my moder t wt her a lytell I haue talked t comyned, I so began proprely for to dyssymyle. After mydday ye knighte rode out for to hunte. Then she thynkyge vpon ye counseyll of her moder went to the gardyner 't sayde to hym. Cut downe this yonge tree newly planted that I may make a fyre therof to warme my lorde withal at his comynge from huntyge, for it is a grete wynd 't a ryght sharpe colde. The gardyner sayde, Madame yt wyll I not do, for my lorde loueth better that tre than he dothe all yo other trees neuertheles I shal wel helpe you to gadre wood ynough for to make withall a good fyre but in onywyse this I wyl not hewe downe. She herde that, I boldly she toke ye axe from ye gardyner I hewed downe the tree her selfe 't made ye gardyner wt other to bere it home. At euyn whan ye lorde came from huntynge he was sore a colde The lady lete make a grete fyre, I went I met wt hym, 't set hym on a stole afore the fyre to warme. And as he a lytell whyle had sytten he perceyued yo odoure of the fyre. It called to hym ye gardyner I sayd, I fele by this odour yt my newe plante brenneth in the fyre. The gardiner sayde, Lorde it is trewe, my lady your wyfe hath felled it down. The knyght sayd to her god forbede that my plante sholde be cut downe by you. She answered anone I sayd, Lorde I haue done it knowyng the weder colde 't you also colde. 't therfore I haue ordeyned this fyre for your coforte. As the knyght yt herde he loked angrely vpon her & sayd, O cursed woman, how werest yu so hardy to hewe downe so gentyl a yonge tre yo whiche yu knowest wel yt I loued aboue al other trees. As she that herde she began to wepe I excuse her selfe I sayd My lorde I haue done it for your good I prouffyte, I ye take it so greuously. It began to cry wo wo be to me. Anone as yo knyght sawe ye wepyge 't teeres of his wyfe 't herde her cause he was meued wt mercy saynge to her, Cesse of your wepyg, 't beware how yt ye ony more angre or trouble me in ony thyge / that I loue. The next daye erly in the mornyge / she went ayen to the chyrchewarde, 't met w' her moder' comyge ayenst her. It they salued eche other. Than yo doughter sayd to her moder, O dere moder I wyll loue the preest, for I have attempted my lorde as ye couseyled me / but all for nought, for he anone forgaue it whan he sawe me a lytell wepe. Tho sayd ye moder, though olde men one tyme forgyue / they double the payn vpon an other tyme. I therfore I counseyll you yt ye an other tyme attempte hym. Tho sayde: the doughter I maye no lenger abyde, for I suffer so moche payn for the loue of ye preest, that w' my tonge I canne not tell, therfore ye shall perdone me I wyll noo more folowe or do after your counseyll. than sayde the moder, for the love that the chylde sholde haue vnto the moder attempte hym yet ones. It for your faders blessynge / and thenne yf ye goo quyte wtout ony harme or betinge, loue the preest in the name of god. tho answered yo doughter, it is to me a grete payn so long tyme to abyde. neuertheles for ye blessyng of my fader I shal ons atepte hym. but say me how I shall begyn. the moder sayd I vnderstande yt he hath a lytell houde yt he loueth wel't yt kepith his bed. cast ye houd wt so grete might afore his face that it dy t yf ye scape wtout a strype or that he forgyue it lyghtely, in the name of god than loue the preest. Than sayd the doughter, I shall in all thynge doo after your couseyll, for there is noo doughter lyuynge to day yt wolde more gladly haue ye blessynge of the fader the moder than I. And so she bad her moder fare well / It went to her house ayen / It that day wt grete importunyte I trouble of herte she brought too the nyght. It whan the nyghte was comen, she comaunded the bed to be couered w pupure t w clothe of golde the whyles the knyght sate by the fyre. And whan the bed was thus made redy. the lytell hounde as he was accustomed lepte on the bedde t she toke hym by the hynder legges, 't wt a wood 't a malycyous herte she cast it ayenst the wall yt it lay styll dede. Whan the good olde knyght that sawe / he was merueylously angry. It sayd wt a loude voyce too his wyfe, O worste I most cruell of all wycked wymmen how coudest yu fynde in thyn herte that lytell gentyll hounde to sle, yt I so moche loued. Lorde sayd she haue ye not sene how the hounde wt his foule fete hath our bed that is soo precyously couered with ryche clothes made foule comynge out of the myre: And the knyghte sayde wt moche anger, knewe ye not yt I loued moche better that lytell hounde than the bed. Whan she herde that, anone she began pytyously to wepe t sayd woo be to me that I was borne for all thynge that I doo for the best it is all tourned in to the worste. The knyght wolde not suffre the wepynge and weymentynge of his wyfe. but for that yt he loued her soo moche he sayd to her leue or cesse your wepyge for I forgyue you it all togyder. And I counseyll you that ye beware how that ye dysplease me from hens forth / & they went toogyder to bed. Upon ye morowe she rose vp erly t went to the chyrche where as she found her moder / to whome whan she hadde done reuerence as it behoued, She sayd, moder now wyll I loue ve preste, for I have now attempted the seconde tyme my husbonde ? all thynges he suffred. The moder sayde, O my dere doughter there is noo cruelte or falshede aboue the cruelte of olde folkes. It therfore I cousell you yt ye yet ones proue hym. To whom the doughter answered, Moder ye laboure in vayne, for yf ye wyst what 't how moche payne yt I suffer for ye prestes loue ye sholde rather helpe me yf ye loued me. The moder sayd, Here me doughter this one tyme, I I shal neuer let you more. Thyke howe yt ye have souked mylke of my brestes: 't the grete payne that I suffred for you at your byrth. By thyse paynes my dere doughter I desyre of & I charge you yt ye denye me not this good petycyon. I I promyse to god I shall no more let nor hyder you of your entente: but rather helpe you therto./ Tho answered yo doughter, it is to me a grete payne to abstevne me I forbere my selfe, so longe from the loue of the preest, neuerthelesse for ye grete charges that ye haue layde too me, and also for yt ye have made a vowe no more for to lette me, but to further me, tell me how I shall attempte hym, I I-shal ones yet put it in aduenture. The moder sayd, I know well that on sondaye next comyng he entendeth to haue vs all to dyner I there shall be your fader I and all your frendes It al yo best of the cyte. And whan ye are set in your place I all the metes are brought it serued vpon the table / faste one of the keyes preuely yt hangeth at your gyrdell in the table clothe I than fayne to have forgoten your knyfe and say thyse wordes openly. Se what a shorte wytte that I am of, I haue forgoten my knyf in my chambre / 't ryse vp hastely 't go. 't ye cloth w' al the metes ye shall caste down to ouerthrowe ypon the grounde. And yf ye scape wtout payn I make a vowe to god I shall neuer let you after. The doughter sayde yt shall I gladly doo I so toke her leue I departyd. The feste daye came y' all as the moder sayd were boden. The seruautes made redy t couered ye table. All were set at ye table. It the doughter sate ouer avenste her lorde. And whan the table was well serued wt metes t other thynges as therto belonged / ye lady of the house sayd with an high voyce, se how forgeteful I am of mynd I haue lefte my knyfe in my chamber ye whiche I muste fetche / 't rose hastely vp and drewe ye clothe with all the mete that was vpon it with her. and all the golde vessels 't saltes lay vpon ye groude. The knyght vexed sore angrye in his herte, but for shame he dyssymyled afore his gestes, 't comauded on other clene clothe I other metes to be brought I wt Iov and myrth he solyted I meued his gestes to ete and make good chere. so that by hym they were all gladed. The feste or dyner done they gaue all thankyges to ye knyght I toke theyr leue I departed euery man towardes his owne house. Upon ye nexte day in the mornyge ye knyghte arose erly 't went to the chyrche I herde a masse the which ended went to a barbour It sayd too hym, Mayster are ye experte in blode letynge in what vayne yt I wyll desyre you. He sayde, syr I am experte in what vayne yt ye can name in mannes body. The knyghte sayd, I am well contente come on wt me. I whan he was comen to his house he entred in to his chamber where his wyfe laye in bed I sayd to her Ryse vp shortely. Than sayd she, what shall I do up thus erly it is not yet nyne the clocke. The knyght sayd, ye muste ryse vp, for ye muste be letten blode on both your armes. she sayd, I was neuer laten blode / 't shall I nowe blede. Tho sayd ye knyght, that is trouth, I therfor ye are a fole. For thyke ye not yt ye hewe fyrst downe my tree, I an other tyme ye kylled my lytell houde I yesterday ye shamed me afore all our frendes I parentes. I the fourth is yf I sholde suffer you thus too go forthe ye sholde me for euer confoude t shame. the cause herof I consyder yt ye have euyll I wylde blode win your body, I therfore I wyll that yt corrupte blode shall be drawen out that ye from hensforth shal no more put me to shame I angre, and lete to be made a grete fyre, and she stode and cryed and helde vp her hondes towardes the heuen and sayde, My lorde forgyue me this t[r]espace # / and haue pyte vpon me at this tyme, and I shal neuer more offende The knyghte sayd pray for no mercy, for by the mercy that god hath wroughte, without that thou holdest oute thyn arme strayte I shall sone haue thyn herte blood. and he sayd also to the barbour, smyte harde I make a depe hole in her arme, or elles I shall gyue you a grete strype. Than smote ye barbour so sore that the bloode came habundautly out. and the knyght wolde not suffer hym to staunche it vnto the tyme that she chaunged coloure in her vysage. And as this was done the knyght bad to be stopped or stauche yt vayne. It bad ye barbour smyte the vayne vpon ye other arme. Thene cryed she wt a loude voyce, My swete husbonde haue compassyon vpon me for now I deve. The knyght answered, my wyfe ye sholde haue afore thought on th[i]s or that ye have done to me thyse thre euyll tournes or despytes. Thene she helde out her left arme. It ye barbour smote therin an hole yt the blood came out ryght hudgely. It suffred her to blede vnto the tyme that the coloure in her vysage chaunged I that she swouned / Than sayd the knyght, now bynde that arme I stauche it. I sayd to her now goo to bed, I studye and thynke hensforth how ye may amende your self or elles I shall draw ye bloode of your herte. And as this was done he gaue the barbour his rewarde and he wente ayen vnto his own house, and the wyfe vnder ye handes of hir maydens nyghe deed was ladde to hyr bedde 't bad one of hir handmaydens go to hyr moder in all haste 't say that she come speke with me afore I deve. The moder whan she harde yt she was gladde of ye correctyon of hir doughter t hastely came to hyr / the doughter whā she herd hyr moder sayd to hir, O my moste swete moder I am almoste dede, for I haue so moche blode bled, yt I byleue yt I shal not scape ye deth. Tho answered ye moder / sayd I not too you that olde men are ryght cruell 't fell, wyll ye nowe loue the preste. Whiche sayd, The deuyll may the preest confounde t shame. neuer loue other but my husbonde. Than sayde the mayster to themperour, Lorde haue ye vnderstande me. And he answered ryght well, for amonges all other yt euer I haue herde this was the best example. Thre euyll dedes she dyde vnto her husbonde I I doute not but yf she had done ye fourth she sholde haue shamed hym for euer. Than sayd yo mayster therfore I counseyll you yt ye beware of your wyfe leste that it happen worse to you. for why yf ye doo to deth your onely sone for her wordes, ye shall be deceyued in ye ende, I for euer ye shal forthynke it. The Emperour sayd truly mayster this day my sone shal not dye. The mayster sayd My lorde I thanke you yt ye for min example and my sake this day haue spared your sone.

The Fysth Complaynte of the Empresse.

The empresse hervg yt the chylde was not yet dede apparayled & clothed her in her vesture or clothyge. & lete to be orderned her waynes I cartes / as thoughe she wolde have gone to her fadr home in her coutre for to haue coplayned of ye grete shame yt was done vnto her I coude haue no remedy herof. The servautes seynge yt went I shewed it to themperour yt thempresse was goyng in to her countree. Whan he yt perceyued he went to her saynge, whither are ye goynge, I hoped yt ye had loued me so moche yt in all ye worlde ye sholde haue sought no solace but wt me. To yt she sayd, That is true. It therfore I go from you, for I had leuer here of your deth. than to see you dye, wtoute doute ye delyte soo moche to here thyse maysters, yt it shall happen vpon you as it dyde to Octavian themperour ye whiche wes so coueytous that ye noble men of the empyre buryed hym quycke & fylled his mouth wt molten golde. Themperour sayd, Dere wyf do not that another tyme ye blame to you or to me myght be layde. Than sayd the empresse, truly yo blame is yours for haue ye not promysed me many tymes that your sone sholde dye, I yet he lyueth, I therfore from hensforth I wyll no more byleue you. Then sayd themperour. It becometh not a kynge euery cause lyghtly too dyscusse, wout aduyse I specyally vpon his sone, vpon whome it is not behoueful lyghtly to gyue jugement and therfore I say I pray you that ye wyll tell me somwhat by the whiche I may myselfe gouerne, for it is vtter destruccon of a kynge wout aduyse I vndescretly to gyue jugement. She answered I sayde, I wyll gladly tell you a notable example, so that from hensforth ye shall not be coueytous or desyrous to here yo maysters. And began to saye in this forme.

The Fyfth Example of the Empresse.

Octavianus themperour reygned in Rome ryghte ryche & coueytous. It aboue all thynges he loued golde. The cytezyens yt tyme of Rome dyde moche harme I many grete outrages to other nacyons. In soo moche that dyuerse nacyons 't regyons were meued & styred ayenst ye Romayns. In that tyme there was mayster Uirgilius, ye whiche excelled in magique I in other scyences all other maysters. The cytezeyens prayed hym that he by his arte I connyge wolde make somwhat by the whiche they of theyr ennemyes myght haue warnyng 't knowlege byfore. Wherby that they myght pureey for themselfe ye better. He lete doo make by his arte and connyge a toure, I aboue vpon ye toure dyde to be set as many ymages as in al the worlde were regyons and prouynces. and in the myddes of the toure he let to be made and set an ymage, whiche helde in his hande an appell or a grete roude balle of golde. And euery ymage of the toure helde in his hand a lytell bell, and stode torned lokynge towardes his owne prouynce to hym assygned. And as oftentymes as ony prouynce wolde styre or rebel aveste the romanes. so often torned hym the ymage of yt londe I range the bell. That heryge the cytezeyns of Rome armed themselfe 't to that prouynce yede with all theyr myght for that londe to kepe vnder. And soo was there no londe so grete yt coude wreke them vpon the romaynes, and therfore were they bedradde and fered ouer all the worlde. After that Mayster Uirgilius* made for the solace and conforte of the poor people a lyght that alwaye brende, and by that lyghte he made two bathes, the one of them hote, in the whiche the poore people myghte bathe and wasshe theym / I that other colde in the whiche they myghte theymselfe refresshe, and betwyx that lyghte and the bathes he made an ymage standynge, in whos forhede was wryten: He yt smyteth me shall anone haue vengeaunce. This ymage stode there many yeres. At the laste there came a clerke and behelde that ymage 't radde this wrytynge / and thoughte in hymselfe, what vengeauce myght he fynde therfore. I byleue better that yf ony man sholde smyte the that thou fyllest there wt to ye erthe, he sholde fynde some tresoure vnder thy sete. It therfore is thy wrytynge that no man sholde have it. It the clerke lyfte vp hys hande I gaue the ymage a grete stroke yt it fell to ye grounde. It anone yo lyght was out. It the bathes were vanysshed away. I he foude no tresoure. The poore folke yt perceyuynge were all sorowfull sayenge, cursyd mote he be for euer more yt for his synguler coueytyse hathe destroyed this ymage. Livs Misspelt Ulrgilius in the text.

hathe robbed of so grete solace I coforthe. Here after assembled thre kynges the whiche of yo Romayns had been oppressed I suffred greate wronges. I went to couvsell wt them of theyr couysell, how they myght best of yo Romayns be auenged. It some of them sayd, we labour in vayne, as longe as there. standyth yo tour wt the ymages we maye no thynge do avenste theym. To yt counseylle arese vp foure knyghtes and sayd to the kynges, we have thoughte a goode remedy how we shal destroye the tours wt the ymages and yt to do and brynge aboute we wyll our lyues sette to pledge. Yf. that ye wyll do ye coste. The sayd ye kynges what coste shall we do. They sayd, we must have iiii tonnes full of golde. Than sayd ye kynges, take that golde I fulfyll youre promyse. The knyghtes toke ye golde I went towardes Rome. I whan they were thyder come in the night wout. one of yo yates in the dyche wt water they drowned one of yo tonnes wt the golde. It another tonne they drowned by the secode yate I the thyrde tonne by yo thyrde yate. "I the fourth ton by the fourth yate they drowned. And whan they had thus done erly in the mornynge they entred in to ye cyte: at an houre convenyent whan yt themperour went over the. marte, they dyde to hym reverence as it behoued. Themperour seynge them demaunded frome whens they were, or what scyences or what seruyce yt they coude do. Whiche answered, we are of ferre-countrees 't we be sothsayers so perfyte yt there was neuer thynge so preuely or secretly.

hydde but y' we shall fyde it by our dremes. We have herde that ye laboure I have pleasure in such thynges, and therfore came we to you for to wyte yf ye had ony nede of our seruyce! Themperour sayd, I shall proue you t yf it be so yt I fynde you true, ye shall have of me grete rewardes I thanke, they sayde we aske no thynge but yo haluen dele for our rewarde of the golde that by vs shall be founden. The emperour sayd, I am therwith wel content. And thus had they with the emperour many wordes. At euen whan themperour was goyng to bedde they sayde too hym. My lorde yf it please you this nyghte shall the oldest of vs set his connynge a werke I dreme, I the thyrde day we shall shewe you his dreme I what it sygnefyeth. Themperour sayd goo in goddis name. And they went forth wt grete gladnesse. It all yt nyght they passed ouer with derysions I myrth vpon truste that they sholde come to a good purpose, whan ye thyrde daye was comen they went erly too themperour. It the fyrste of them sayd my lorde pleaseth you to goo with vs without one of ye yates of thy cyte & I shall shewe you where as a tonne full of golde is hyd. Themperour sayd, I shall go with you and se yf it be true that ye saye. whan they were comen to the place they drewe out yo tonne that they there afore had put / The emperour whan he that sawe was gladde, and gaue to them theyr parte. Tho sayde the seconde dremer, my lorde this nyght I shal dreme. Themperour sayd, god gyue you a good dreme. ye next nyght came he 't toke out ye other tonne, and gaue it to themperoure, I toke hym his dele. In lyke wyse dyd the thyrde. 't ye fourth, vpon ye whiche themperour was out of all mesure ioyus I glad I sayd he had not sene afore soo true 't experte sothsayers or dremersas they were ! Than sayd they al togyder at once as it had ben out of one mouth, my lorde we have one after another dremed yo whiche as ye have sene be all true proved. But now yf it please you that we may dreme all togyder this nyghte, we truste that too vs shall bee shewed where we shall fynde a greate quantyte or substauce of golde I of rychesse, the Emperoure sayde god gyue to you a gode dreme yt to me and to you may be proffytable. Unto ye next morowe they came ayen vnto yo Emperoure I sayd to hym wt joyouse I gladde vysages or coutenauces. My lorde we brynge gode 't proffytable tydynges, for this nyght in our slepes such I so grete a tresour is to vs shewed yo whiche yf ye wyll suffre it for to be soughte, ye shall be so moche enryched that in this worlde shall be none to you lyke. Themperour sayd, where sholde ye fynde ye hoorde or tresoure, they sayd, vnder the fundament of the tour yt the ymages standen on. The Emperoure answered, God defend that I shokle for love of golde destroye that toure w' ymages wherwith y' we of oure ennemyes be defended 't warned. They sayde too hym ayen, My lorde, Haue ye founde vs in our saynges otherwyse than true 4 Themperour sayd nay. O Lorde sayd they, we with our owne hondes shall gete oute yo gold wtout hurtynge of the tour or of ye ymages. And it is expedyent yt secretly in the night by vs it be done, for drede of resorte and concours of yo people leste that we sholde ren in the noyse & clamour of theym, and also that they sholde not take that good and golde away from you and vs. The Emperour sayde, Goo in the name of god and doo your beste, as ye well cane, and I shall to morowe erly come too you. Tho went they with joye and gladnesse, and in the nyght they were laten in too the toure, and with grete haste and dylygence they undermynded it. on the next daye erly they mounted upon theyr horses 't rode ayen towardes theyr owne countre with ioye t glory. And or that they came w'out the syght of rome / the toure fell downe. And on the morne ensuyinge whan it was fallen / 4 the Senatours it perceyued they sorowed gretely 't there was a grete sorowe I bewaylynge thrughout all ye cyte I went to themperour 't sayd, lorde how maye it be yt this tour is thus fallen, by the whiche we have alwayes had warnynge afore of our enemyes. He answered I sayd, To me came foure fals deceyuers I fayned themself to be foure sothsayers I yt they coude fynde tresoure hyd in the groude. And they sayd that vind the fundacyon of ye toure was hydde an vinumerable some of golde you whiche they sholde well undermyne w'out huntige of the toure or ymages / I gave fayth to them I they have deceyued me, they answered hym / ye have coueyted so moche golde, I for your insacyate couetyse we shall be all destroyed, but fyrste your couetyse shall full (sic) vpon your selfe.

I toke I ladde hym vnto ye capytoll, I layde hym on his bac 't poured his mouth full of molten golde, saying to hym ye haue desyred golde, I therfore ye shall drynke golde I after they buryed hym quycke. Not long after that came thenmyes ayenst ye Romayns, I ouercame I destroyed them al. Than savd thempresse vnto themperour haue ye my lorde this example well vnderstand t he sayd ryght well. Than sayd she, The tour wt the ymages is your body wt your v. wyttes, as long as ye lyue there none so hardy to trouble or make werre vpon you ne vpon your people. That hath your sone ryght well vnderstonde wt his vii. maysters t wt theyre false narracyons or fables fynde how they may destroye you, for ye are ouermoche couetyse to here t enclyned to them. t in so moche yt they shal vndermyne you I caste you vnder fote, I bryge you to nought. The ymages are your fyue wyttes yt be all lost. for they se yt ye be all chyldyshe or folyshe they shall destroy and sle you. I your sone shall opteyne your empyre. Theperour sayd, ye haue recyte to me a good exaple. wherfore it shall not to me happen as it dyde wt yo tour but my sone fyrste this daye shall be hanged. To whome thempresse sayd, yf ye doo so ye shall fare well I lyue long. Upon ye nexte day he commauded hym to be lad to hangyge. It as he was towardes ye galowes lad, came rydynge ayenst hym vpon an hors his fyfth mayster towardes yo palays. It came before themperour I saluted hym w' all reuerence / I he despysed his salutacyon. I put hym in fere of his lyfe. 't ye mayster sayd My lorde I haue not deserued to dye. It ye my salutacyon despyse it is not your honoure. for your sone hath not with vs be of such condycyons as ye repute hym for as ye in short tyme shal fynde, 't that he speketh not is of his his (sic) grete wysdome. It knowe ye yt he shal well speke as ye tyme comyth, though yt he now speke not, as ye in shorte tyme shall here. But ye saye yt he your wyfe wolde haue shamed. yt byleue not, for so wise a man as he is neuer sholde attemte so shamful a dede. And ye put hym to dethe for your wynes wordes, ye sholde not scape without shame and vengeaunce / In lyke wise as Ypocras scaped not wtout vengeauce for ye deth of Galtenus his cosyne. The emperour sayd that wolde I fayne here and understonde. The mayster sayd, what sholde anale ve narracyon to tel vnto you for your prouffyte yf in the meane seasone your sone sholde be hanged. I therfore yf ye wyll call ayen your sone, and therafter do as ye thynke beste it shall be at your pleasure. Themperour lete call ayen his sone and set him in pryson. And tho began ye mayster too tell vnder this maner as foloweth:

The Example of the Fyfthe Mayster.

Somtyme there was a famous physycyan named Ypocras ryght connynge, ye which exceded all other in connynge & scyence he had wt hym his neuewe or kynnesman yt was called Galienus, ye whiche he loued moche. This Galienus was of an excellet wytte & applyed all his wytte & mynde to lerne of h[i]s vncle the scyence of physyke. Whan Ypocras apperceyued that in as moche as he coude hyde from hym hys conynge fervnge that he sholde excelle hym in yt crafte, for ye grete wytte that he was of. As Galienus this sawe, he studyed L excersysed, in soo moche yt in shorte tyme he had perfyte connynge physyke. for the whiche Ypocras enuyed hym moche. It hapned vpon a tyme therafter, yt the kyge of Ungary sent. his messengers vnto Ypocras that he sholde come vnto hym his. sone fer to cure or make hole. Ypocras excused hyself & wolde no goo. but sent his cosyne Galienus wt his wrytynge in the company of ye messengers for to excuse hym. And whan Galienus was comen afore ye kynge he was ryghte worshypfully receyued, but he merueyled why that Ypocras wolde not come. he excused hym sayinge that he had many grete thynges too do that he myght not come, but he hath sent me in his stede. 't wt the helpe of god I shall make hole that childe. That pleased well yo kynge. Galjenus went to the chylde. I whan he had seene his vryne, and tasted his pounces. he sayd tho (sic) the quene. O excellent prynces I pray you here I suffer my wordes, I tel me who is ye fadr of this chylde. She sayd, who sholde be his fader but my lorde the kyng. Galienus sayd, I am sure yt he is not the fader. She answered yf ye wyll say yt for a trouth I shall doo your hede to be smytn of. he answered I say yet ones agayn yt this kynge is not the fader and I am not therfore comen hyther to lese my hede. for I haue no suche rewarde deserued. It he was goynge his waye. The quene yt seynge spake. O good mayster yf ye wyl kepe it secrete, I not dyscouer me, I shal shewe I open vnto you myn herte. The mayster sayd God defende that from me, that I to no persone sholde shewe it. and therfore O noble quene shewe it boldely to me for it shall neuer passe my mouthe after, and I shall your sone ease and make hym hole. She sayde yf ye doo that, ye shall haue of me a good rewarde. It therfore here what I shall saye. Of fortune came hyther vnto my lorde, the kyng of Burgondyen, and he was so longe wt me conversaunt that this chylde by hym I bare. Tho sayd ye mayster, fere ye not, I knewe well that it was so byfore. I anone he gaue the chylde to ete beef or of an oxe to drynke. and the chylde was eased of his infyrmyte. And whan as the kyge herde that the chylde was quite of his malady he gaue vnto ye mayster a good rewarde. but of the quene he secretly receyued and had a greter gyfte and a specyal thanke and went his waye. And whan that he was comen home, Ypocras his mayster demaunded of hym, have ye yt chyld heled. I he sayd ye. Than asked he hym what he gaue to hym. I he sayd, I gaue hym fleshe of ox beef to etc, 't water to drynke. Tho sayd Ypocras. Than is the moder of that chylde not true too her husbonde. yt is trouth sayd Galienus. Ypocras anone was meued wt enuye, I thought in hymselfe yf here be not found a remedy, my scyence shall no more be set by. It he shal be named and praysed aboue me. And from that day forthwarde he thought 't deuysed how he myght slee hym. Uppon a day Ypocras called and sayd come go we to seke and gadre herbes in the gardyne. To whome he sayd mayster I am redy. And whan they were comen in to ye gardyne, Ypocras sayd, I fele that this herbe is ryght vertuous, stoupe downe I gadre me of it. Galienus dyde so. and as they went aboute the gardyne, sayd Ypocras now knowe I well by yo odoure of this herbe that it is better I precyoser than golde, and therfore stoupe downe to the groude I drawe hym oute wt the rotes for he is ryght moche. Galienus bowed hymself down to plucke up the herbe. Ypocras drewe out his knyfe 't kylled hym. After that Ypocras fyll seke to the dethe that ye strengthes of his body fayled hym and dyde as moche as he coude to helpe hymself but it wold not be and as his scolers t dyscyples herde of it they went hastely to hym. It all that they myght or coude do for the prouffyte of his helthe they dyde / but it auayled hym nothynge. Whan Ypocras that perceyued, he sayd vntoo his scolers. Goo and fetche me a grete tonne and fyll it full vnto the brynkes with water. And whan they had soo done, he sayd too them make nowe therin an hondred hooles, and whan that was doone, there wente none of the water oute. The sayd Ypocras. Beholde my moste dere dyscyples, how yt ye vengeaunce of god is fallen vpon me as ye openly may see, for in this tonne are an hondred holes, 't yet gooth there out not one droppe, ryght so there cometh no vertue out of yo herbes to helpe me. and therfore what ye doo to me it helpeth not, for I must dye. But my dere chyldren yf my neuewe Galienus were now on lyue, he sholde hele me, whom I have slayne / yt me sore forthynketh. It therfore ye vengeauce of god cometh ouer me. And this sayd he torned hym to yo wal I gaue up the goost. Tho sayd ye mayster to themperour, My lorde vnderstande ye well what I have sayd. He answered ye ryght well, what hurte had it be to hym & Galienus had lyued. The mayster answerd it had ben ryght good, for Ypocras at that tyme had not dyed. It therfore by yo ryghtwyse Jugement of god his medycynes auayled hym not. It therefore I shewe to you yt it shall happen worse to you, yf yt ye put to deth your sone for ye wordes of your wyfe, which in tyme of necessyte shall assyste I socoure you. I consyder ye not, yt ye have after your fyrst wyfe, ye haue wedded this wyfe yt ye now haue. It so ye may yo thyrde I yo fourthe, I neuer shall ye haue of ony of them suche a sone yt shal kepe I saue you from peryll. Themperour sayde truly he shal not dye. Tho sayd yo mayster than do ye wysely, I commende you to god, I thanke you, yt ye haue this daye for me spared your sone. Themperour sayd I marke this wel yt wymmen are crafty, I subtyl, herfore I wyl not for you but for my self saue hym.

The Syxte Complaynte of the Empresse.

Whan that thempresse had knowledge, she shewed her selfe as a wode or an Impacyent body yt all that sawe her or herde her wondred \(\) sayd to themperoor your wyfe she pyneth her self as though she sholde deye. Themperour that heryng went to her \(\) sayd wherfore be ye so heuy, \(\) so impacyent. O lorde how shold I holde it in, whan I am the only doughter of a kyng \(\) your wyfe, \(\) in your company I haue had a grete despyte \(\) shame, and contynually ye haue promysed me to punysshe it, but ye perfourme it not. The emperour sayd, I wote not what I shal do. ye laboure from day to day to haue my sone slayne, and the maysters labour to saue his lyfe. And amonges al thyse I know well that he is my sone, but whether the trouth is that knowe I not. Than sayd she, that is it yt I complayne that ye beleue the maysters more than ye do me.

Therfore it shall happen to you as dyde to a kyng with his stewarde. Than sayd the Emperoure, tell that example, happely it sholde meue me the soner to put my sone to deth. She sayde, gladly, but I praye you gyue attendaunce what I shall saye, and began to tel as hereafter ensueth.

The Syxte Example of the Empresse.

There was a kyng ryght proude I merueylously dyfformed in his vysage in suche wyse that wymen hym hated I abhorred. This kynge thought Rome to destroye 't the romaynes to slee, t ye bodyes of Peter t Poule to take t cary awaye, whiche while he was in this mynde he called to hym his stewarde that was ryght secrete wt hym of his pryue counseyll and sayd to hym. Seke me a fayre woman yt this nyghte may slepe wt me. The stewarde answered, My lorde ye knowe wel your infyrmyte I dysese, I yt no woman wyll doo it wtout a grete somme of money. The kynge sayd, thynke ye y' for money I wyll want one, haue I not golde 't syluer ynough though it were a thousande florenys I sholde it gladle gyue. The stewarde herynge yt was anone smyten wt couetyse, went too his owne wyfe whiche was ryght fayre, chast, 't of a gode kynrede, it sayde to her, O my good wyfe, my lorde desyreth it coueyteth fore to slepe we a fayr t beauteuouse woman, t wyll not forbere it, though yt she wold aske of hym a thousande florenys, and hath commaunded me too puruey hym of one. And therfore I counseyll you that ye to vs gete that money. The wyfe sayde, were it not so that the kynge so proude and foule of vysage were, yet wolde I not to that euyl consente bycause of the synne ayenst god. The stewarde answered, 't 1 consente that ye shal do it, I therto I courseyl and comaunde you, and promyse you wtoute that ye consente to me herin, ye shall neuer haue good daye w' me. She heryng that trembled, in so moche that for drede she consented to hym. The stewarde yt herynge went to the kynge 't sayd Syr I haue founde a fayre woman I she is comen of a good house, whiche wil not lesse haue than a thousande florenes I in the euin she shall come, I erly in the mornyng she must away that she be not seen of the people. The kynge answered I sayd, I am well content. whan the nyght was comen the stewarde lad his wyfe to yo kynges bed and made faste the dore 't yede his waye. Erly in the mornynge the stewarde arose & went vnto y kynge & sayd. My lord it shall be daye win a whyle, it is good that ye performe your promise I let the woman go. The kyng sayd this woman pleseth me so well yt so sone she shall not departe from me. whan the stewarde that herde he departed thens al sory. unneth he taryed ony whyle but came to the kynge and sayd. My lorde the mornynge is comen, therfore let the woman goo, leste yt she be ashamed, as I have promysed her. The kyng sayd yet shall she not go from me. 't therfore goo out and shet the dore ayen. The stewarde ryght sorowfull departed and wente vp & downe with an heuy & an angry herte, tyll that the fayre 't the clere daye appered, and than entred ayen in to the chamber and sayd. My lorde it is clere daye, suffre that woman to departe that she be not therwith ashamed. The kynge answered/ I saye to you for a trouth she shall not yet departe for her company is to me ryght pleasaunt ? acceptable. The stewarde yt herynge coude no lenger forbere ne holde his owne counseyll, but sayd vnto ye kyng. O my good and gracyous lorde I beseche you suffre her to departe for it is myn owne wyfe. The kynge herynge that sayd to hym. Open yo wyndowe. I whan it was open, the fayre I and the bryght day appered. he behelde the woman ryght fayre and goodly. perceyued yt it was yo wyse of the stewarde 't sayd to hym. O thou moste 't worste rybaude or knaue, why haste thou for so lytell money ashamed I vndone thy good I fayre wyfe. I her vnto me vnwetyngly haste delyuered. Therfore haste ye t gete the out of my realme I neuer more herafter come in my syghte, for frome hensforth yf euer I may se the thou shalt dye yo moost shamefull I horryblest dethe that euer canne be ymagyned. Whan ye stewarde herde yt he fled his waye t durste not abyde 't was neuer so hardy ony more to come in to that realme. And ye kynge kepte ye wyfe al hys lyuedayes in grete worshyp, and gaue to hyr plente of all thynges that to her behoued 't appertayned. After that the kynge lete do gadre & assemble a grete & a myghty armye & puyssaunce of men of werre. 't went to Rome with grete myght, 't besyeged

the cyte on all sydes, so long tyll that the Romayns wolde haue delyuered hym for to haue departed and withdrawen hymself from thens the bodyes of the holy apostles Petyr & Poule. Than was there in yo cyte seuen wyse maysters as ye nowe haue, by the courseyll of whome all the cyte was gyded t gouerned. And the cytezeyns came too theym and sayd. What shall we do, it behoueth vs as that we delyuere vnto oure dedely ennemyes the bodyes of the holy apostles or elles ye cyte. Tho answered ye fyrste mayster. I shall wt my wysdome 't connynge this day ye cyte 't ye body of the apostles saue. It so one after another promysed to doo ye same, eueryche of theym for one daye. In lyke wyse as ye maysters haue promysed your sone. wt that ye kynge began to assaute the cyte on all partyes. Tho began ye fyrste mayster to saye, It to alledge so wysely for to have pease, yt yo kynge that day lefte his assaute makynge t withdrewe hym a lytyll fro the I soo dyde all the maysters one after an other vnto the laste. To whome came ye burgeyses & sayd. O mayster ye shall vnderstande that yo kynge hath made his othe t sworne that to morowe wt al his puyssaunce t strength he wyll haue It wynne the cyte. Or elles we muste all be in jeoperdye too lese our lyues. Therfore in aquytynge of your promyse defende I kepe vs from daunger lyke as all your felowes afore haue done. to that answered yo mayster It sayd be of good comforte 't fere not, for too morowe I shall by my connynge shewe suche a werke and operacyons / that the kyng with all his puissaunce and myght shal se I leve the syege. The nexte daye the kynge made 't gaue a grete assaute too the cyte. Tho went the mayster and endued or clothed hymselfe with a meruayvesture or clothynge hauynge therin the fethers or ye tayles of pecockes and of other foules of dyuers coloures, and toke two bryght swerdes in eche hande one. and went there with all and stode vpon the hygheste toure of all the cyte. and began to meue and torne or shewe hymselfe aboute on all partes towarde the oste so that they myght all beholde 't se hym, and he helde in his mouthe the two bryght swerdes yt merueylously shyned. They wout of ye kynges hoost that seveng sayd to hym. O lorde beholde vpon hyghest of yonder toure a wonderfull thynge or fygure. Ye I se it wel yt it is merueylous / but what it is I knowe not. They sayd to hym It is Jhesus the god of ye crysten folke yt is come out of heuen vs al to sle 't destroye wt his two swerdes yf wee here ony lenger abyde. The kynge herynge that trembled for fere and sayde what shall we do, there is but one way and that is that we anone go and departe fro hens leste that they god auenge hymselfe vpon vs. Tho began ye kynge wt all his oste to fle, notwithstondyge there was no nede. but yt they of ye mayster were begyled 't And whan ye romaynes yt sawe they hastely moued after al armed in good ordynaunce. It the kynge wt many of his people they kylled and destroyed. 't also in that manere by grete subtylte of ye mayster was ye myghty kynge wt his folke ouercomen. Then sayd thempresse to themperour, Lorde haue ye vnderstande what I haue sayde. He sayd ye, well in ye beste wyse. She sayd, haue ye no herde what I have sayd to you at the begynnynge of this narracyon, of the stewarde that the kynge trusted so moche, which for lucre of good shamed his owne wyfe, 't he for that was dryuen 't banysshed out of the londe. In lyke wyse your sone for the desyre and appetyte that he hath to the empyre, entendeth to confounde and destroye you. But while ye be in your myght t power do with hym as yo kynge did wt his stewarde yf ye wyll not put hym to deth, banysshe him out of your empyre, yt ye without fere may leue in surete of your lyue. And haue ye not also herde how ye kyng lay before ye cyte of Rome, 't howe he was by the wyse maysters dec[e]yued t scorned yt he with his folke were kylled 't slayne. In the same wyse ye seuen maysters entende to do wt you. It by theyr false wyles and subtyltees to deceyue you, I in the ende to sle you yt your sone may regne. Therupon answered themperour 't sayd that shall not so be, for my sone too morowe shal deye. Than commaunded his seruautes that they sholde lede his sone to hangynge. And as the folke herde that there was a grete noyse t a gaderynge of theym and bewayled the dethe of ye only sone of themperour. And as ye syxte mayster herde that, he hasted hym too the Emperour t salued hym moche honourably. It he toke it vnthankfully, I thretned hym or menaced him to dye wt his sone for that he was wt them made dompe, and a rybaude, ye whiche he had shewed vpon his wyfe.

The mayster sayd. I have deserved no deth wt your sone, but grete t large gyftes, for he is not dompe as ye shall here wtin thre dayes yf he may lyue soo longe. and yf ye put hym too deth for wordes of your wyfe, than shall I merueyll of your wysdome. It without doute it shall happen to you as it somtyme happened to a knyght that so moche alowed the saynges of his wyfe that he was bounde to an horse tayle I drawen thrugh out all the cyte to the galowes. Themperour sayde for the loue of god shewe me that example that I may the better beware of that peryl. That wyl I not doo sayd the mayster, wtout ye do cal ayen your sone. Than themperour commaunded to call his sone. And the mayster began afore al the folke to tel in this maner folowynge.

The Example of the Syxte Mayster.

There was an Emperour of Rome the whiche had thre knyghtes whom he loued aboue al other. And in that same cyte was an auncyent knyght yt had wedded a fayre yonge wyfe as ye do thempres whiche aboue al other thynges he loued. This lady coude synge ryht wel, I melodyously I wt suche swetnes yt many drewe to her house I desyred her company / It befell vpon a season as she sate in her house, ye vysage torned in to the strete yt she myght se them that went by. 't began swetely tu synge, yt all folke delyted for to here her, By chaunce came that wayes a knyght of yo Emperours courte & herde that voyce, lyft vp his eye I behelde her Intentysly I anone he was taken in her loue, and entred in to her house & fyll in communycacyon wt her of loue. It amonges al other he demaunded what he sholde gyue her too slepe by hym one nyght. She answered an hondred floreyns. The knyght sayde, tell me whan I shall come, I I shall gyue you an hondred floreyns. She sayd whan I may have a convenyent tyme I shal sende for you. The nexte day she sange agen in the same place, and it fortuned the seconde knyght of themperour to come by that same way, the whiche in lykewyse was smyten in her love, I also promysed her an hondred floreyns. also she promysed to shewe hym a tyme prouyded. day was the thyrd knyght in lyke wyse caught in her loue, the whiche also promysed an hondred floreyns, I she too gyue hym knowslege of the tyme. Thyse thre knyghtes have so secretly spoken with that lady yt none of them had knowlege of other. The lady yt was of malyce I cautelous replenyshed, came to her husbonde 't sayd. syr I haue secrete maters too shewe you, It follows therein my counseyll yf ye do it, our necessite or pouerte ye may largely releue. The knyght sayd tel it me I shal holde it secrete I fulfyl it to my power. She sayde thre knyghtes of theperours court haue ben wt me one after an other in suche wyse yt none knoweth of an other counseyll. 't every of them have offred me an hondred floreyns, myght we ye thre c florayns gete t no knowlege therof be had sholde it not be to vs a grete helpe tour pouerte well releued. The knyght sayd, forsoth yes, 't therfore what someuer ye counseyl me to do I shall followe it. Tho sayd she, I shall gyue you this counseyll. whan they come with the floreyns ye shall stande behynde ye yate wt your swerde drawen in your hande. I bycause yt euery of them comethe alone, ye shall sle one after another. It so we shal have the three c floreyns of them without knowlege of ony other. The knyght answered.

O my best beloued wif I fere me that this euyll can notte be hydde, and we sholde therfore shamefully suffre dethe yf that it were knowen. She sayd I shall this werke begynne. I shall make therof a good ende, and fere it not, whan the knyght sawe that she was so hardy it caused hym to be the more bolde. and she sent for the fyrst knyght and he came to hyr anone with oute ony taryenge to the yate I knocked. I she askyd yf he brought ye c floreyns. and he sayd ye, I haue theym here all redy. The lete she hym in. It anone at ye entrynge in, her husbonde kylled hym I so he dyde ye seconde I the thyrde I in to one secrete chamber they drewe the bodyes of them. Whan it was thus done yo knyght sayd to his lady. O dere wyfe yf thyse bodyes be founde wt vs, we shall dye ye moost shamefull deth yt can be ymagyned for it is not possyble but yt thyse knyghtes shall be myssed in themperours courte. I grete serche ? Inquysyon shall be for them made thrugh all this cyte, where they are become. She sayde, Syr I haue this werke begonne, 't shal make therof a good ende, fere not, as I afore sayd. This lady had a brother the whiche had the gouernaunce of the watche of ye cyte that on ye nyghtis vpon stretes watched wt his felowes. She stode at her gate t called her brother & sayde. O my best brod I have a secrete mater the whiche in confessyon I shal shewe you. I therfore come a lytyll within. I whan yt he was come in, the knyght receiued hym frendly It gaue hym wyne to drynke. It sayd, my well beloued broder, this is ye cause yt I have called you, for of your counseyll

I have moche nede. The broder answered say it boldely to me, I what someuer yt I may do, to my power, yt shall be at your desyre w'out lettynge. Tho sayd she, yesterdaye came in a knyght in good frendshyp / but afterwarde he fyll in suche wordes 't varyaunce wt my husbonde, yt he slewe hym, 't lyeth in my chamber. It myn owne dere broder we haue noo man that we may truste but you. 't yf ye body were founde by vs we sholde dye. 't she made mencyon but of one. ye brother sayd delyuer it me in a sacke I shall bere hym to ye see. she herynge y' was full glad thereof, 't delyuered to hym the body of y' fyrste knyght. he toke it I went w'all a good pase I cast it therin. I as this was done, he came ayen to his syster I sayde, gyue me nowe of the beste wyne for ye are of hym quyte. It she thanked hym't went in to as though she had gone for wyne and began to crye wt an hygh voyce, ye knyghte that was caste in to the see is come ayen. As her brother yt herde he wondred sore, I sayde gyue me hym. I shall se yf he shall aryse ayen. I toke the body of the seconde knyght 't wende it had ben of the fyrst knyght 't went to the see, 't w' a grete stone drowned hym therin. yt done, went ayen vnto his systers house 't sayde, nowe fyll me a cuppe with good wyne, for I haue drowned hym so depe yt he shall neuer come ayen. she sayd thanked be god L went ayen too her chamber I fayned her to fetche wyne. I cryed with a grete voyce. Alas wo be to me he is rysen aven and come out of yo see. It as her brother herde that with grete meruaylle sayd, what deuyll is this knyght that I have thus caste in to yo water I notwithstandynge is comen ayen. Delyuer hym me ye thyrde tyme, I shall se yf he shall come ayen. Tho gaue she hym ye thyrde knxght (sic), whiche he byleued had ben ye fyrste knyght, 't yede w'oute ye cyte to a grete foreste It made a grete fyre I caste the knyght therin. I whan he was almost brente, ye brod went then a lytel dystausce to do his nede. Tho came there a knyght yt wolde ryde to ye cyte where on your mornyage they sholde have a tourneye 't a Justyag. It it was colde weder I derke, I was not fer fro yo cyte. As yt he had a syght of that fyre drewe therto 't alyghted from his horse I warmed hym. The waker came I sayd to hym what arte y". The knyght sayd I am a gentyl knyghte. Tho spake ye waker \cap sayd, y arte no knyght but a deuyll for fyrste I caste yo in to the water, the ii tyme w' a grete stone I drowned the, 't the iii tyme I haue put ye in this fyre supposynge yt ye haddest be brente. I yet yu standest here. I tho he toke ye knyght wt his hors t cast them both in to the fyre. It after yt he went ayen to his syster I tolde what had hapned hym. Nowe brynge me of yo beste wyne, for after yt I had brente hym I founde hym ayen by ye fyre wt his horse, I have caste them both in the fyre. It his syster perceyued well yt he had brent a knyght of the tourney whiche anone broughte hym of ye best wyne habundauntly. It after he had wel dronken he went thens. Not longe tyme after that there fyll a grete debate I contencon betwyx the knyghte & his wyfe, in such wyse yt he smote her. which had indygnacyon therof 't waxed angry 't sayd that many myght here it, O wretche wyll ye kylle me as ye haue done the thre knyghts of themperours. men yt hervnge layde handes on them, I brought them before ye emperour I ye woman anone knowleged yt hyr husbonde had slayne the thre knyghtes of themperours I how he toke fro them thre hondred floreyns I as it was thus in trouth founde, bothe were drawen atte an horse tayll and hanged vppon the galowes. Than sayd ye mayster to themperour, haue ye vnderstande what I haue sayd. answered ryghte well. I saye for certayne that wyfe was yo worste woman that myght be of all wymmen, for she moued 't styred hym to murdre, I afterwarde dyscouered hym. mayster sayd, It is wtoute doubte yt it shall to you happen worse yf ye put to deth your sone by ye aduyse of your wyfe. Themperour sayd, my sone shall not dye this day. mayster yt herynge yaue thankynges to themperour, and toke leue 't went his waye.

The Seuenth Complaynte of the Empresse.

Whan the empresse herde yt the some of themperour was yet lyuynge, as a mad woman she-ranne to themperour wepynge It cryenge. O vnhappy wyfe what shall I doo. alas alas for I muste nedes sle myselfe yt so am ashamed I no punysshement there vpon done. Themperour answered, God defende you suche thynges to haue in mynde, but suffer a whyle, 't ye shall haue a good ende in your cause. She answered, Syr y' ende shall be euyll, for of yt shal followe to you grete confusyon I to me. Themperour sayd, be styl of such thynges. She sayd, Lorde it shall come to you't your sone as it happened to a kynge I to his stewarde. Themperour sayd I praye you tell me that example. She sayde I wyll gladly tell it, but I fere me that ye wyl here me no more, for ye next day ye seuenth mayster shal speke I saue your sone from yo deth as his felowes have done. The seconde day after this then your sone shal speke, of whoos wordes ye shal haue I take svche joy I delectacyon yt the loue betwyxte vs shall bee holy forgeten L wasshed away. Themperour sayd that is Impossyble to me, for I shal neuer your loue forgete. Tho sayd she, O my best beloued lorde, please it you I shal tel you one example, by ye whiche ye shall beware before of many perylles in tyme comynge, t specyally of your cursed sone, whiche entendeth to destroy me by his maysters. The emperour sayd, tell on your example. and the Empresse began to tell in this wyse ensuynge.

The Seventh Example of the Empresse.

There was somtyme a kyng, the whiche loued his wyfe aboue all thynge. in so moche that he closed her in a stronge castell, It bare ye keyes of the castel hymselfe. The lady was therfore ryght heuy 't desolate. Now in ferre partyes there was a valyaunte knyght ye whiche in a nyght had a dreme after this effecte. For he thought that he sawe one of the fayreste quenes yt myght be. yo which aboue all thynges desyred to haue her loue. yt yf he myghte se her walkynge he sholde clerely haue knowlege of, by whome to hym grete frendshyp It worship sholde come. To ye quene in ye same nyght by vysyon of the sayd knyght, it was to her also shewed. I yet they hadde of eche other neyther knowlege of name neyther of fame. whan ye knyght had thus dremed I seen in his slepe, he thought 't determyned in his mynde that his fote sholde not reste vnto yo tyme tyll he had founde that lady, yt to hym was shewed in his vysyon. and lepte vpon his horse / and toke with hym all that to hym was necessarye for his journey. and rode and laboured thrughe dyuerse regyons and londes soo longe tyll at the last he came vnto the same londe, where that the quene was by her husbonde closed or kepte in a stronge castel. And whan this sayd knyght was come in to ye same cyte, and by a certayne season had there soiourned, it happened on a day as this knyght walked by the castell, and knewe not yt ye quene was therin she sate in a wyndowe to beholde 't see y' people goynge by. 't amonge all other she sawe the sayd knyght, and knewe that he was the same man that she had dremed of. And ye knyght by chaunce lyfte vp his eyen I perceyued yo lady syttyng in the wyndowe. I anone his minde shewed hym yt it was she yt he the dremes of had. It he began to synge a songe of loue. And as she herde yt she was anone taken wt his loue. The knyghte from thensforth dayly went & walked aboute ye castell beholdynge it ouer all yt yf in ony maner wyse he myght gete to her too shewe his mynde. The lady perceyuynge that she wrote a letter 4 cast it downe to hym. And whan he had sene ouer ye letter, I understode ye wyll of that lady, he began to haunte Joustes ? tournamentes I dyde so many gret I merueylous actes or dedes, that ye name of hym came to the kynge. And as the kynge herde that he sent after hym I sayd to hym, Syr knyght I have herde moche honour of you. yf it wyll please you for to abyde 't to dwell wt vs, we shall gyue you large gyftes 't rewardes. The knyght answerd, O ryght mygshlty prynce I am your seruaunte, wolde god yt I coude do ony seruyse to please your magnyfycence, w'out takynge of rewarde saue one thyng afore all other I desyre. The kynge sayd, shewe it boldely what thynge yt it is. The knyght sayd, My lorde sythen yt it hath pleased you for to take me as your seruaunt L one of youre counseyll, me semeth that it were expedyent for bothe our solaces, that I hadde a place nyghe too the wall of the castell; that I myght at all tymes be the more redy at your callynge whan that ye haue nede. Thene the kynge sayd I consente it to you make it as ye thynke it beste. Tho wente the knyght I hyred werkemen I made a fayre logynge by ye walles of yo toure. 't whan it was all redy, He made a couenaunt w' a werkeman for to make out of his house a secret way in to ye tour 't whan it was made redy after his entente, he kylled ye werkeman by cause he sholde not dyscouer. It went in to ye quene I dyde to her reuerence accordyng I they talked of many thynges, yt at thende he desyred for to slepe by her, which she oftentymes denyed, but neveryeles she consented to hym. After yt ye quene thought what shall I do, yf I sholde gyue knowlege herof vnto my husbond, therof sholde come two euyls yo one is my shame, & yt by auenture he sholllde vtterly forsake me & dryue me out of his londe for euer, 't ye knyght he sholde sle, for fro ye dethe he coude not escape, I therfore it is better y' I be styll 't tell not. The knyght after yt as oftentymes as it pleased hym he went in to the quene, 't dyde his wyll with her. And she gaue hym a rynge the whiche ye kyng had gyuen vnto her at theyr weddynge. This knyght in euery batayll and tournamet hadde the vyctory wherfore he was and stode in grete fauour with the kynge insomoche that he made hym his stewarde I gouernoure of al his Regyon I lond. It happened vppon a daye that the kynge dysposed hym selfe for too goo too chase or huntynge, and he commaunded his stewarde for too make hym redy vppon the morowe for too goo with hym, whertoo he offred hym selfe all redy. ¶ And on the morowe after they entred in to ye forest, I all that daye they chased, It followed you wylde bestes that they were so wery that yo kynge by a fontayne sate hym downe to reste. It yo knyghte by ye kynge, I fyll on slepe by hym, hauynge ye rynge vpon his fynger, ye whiche the kynge marked 't knewe. After yt the knyght perceyued yt the kynge had sene the rynge, fayned hymself seke t sayd, My lorde I fele my selfe sore seke t yf I fynde not hastely remedy therfore by the meanes [of] physyke I am but a dede man? therfore I pray you lycence me to go home. To whome he sayd, go my dere frend in goddes name. he anone gate on his horse I hasted hym to his house, I wente to the quene I gave her ayen ye rynge, I tolde her how ye kynge had marked it I sene it on his fynger, I prayed her yf he made ony questyons of ye rynge yt [s]he sholde shewe it to hym. This done, he went downe ayen to his lodgynge. And anone after yt the kynge came to the quene I she receyued hym ryght louyngly, 't after yt a lytyl tyme was passed, the kyng sayd, My lady shew me where ye ryng is that I gaue to you, I desyre to se it. O my lorde to what entente at this tyme desyre ye to se it. Than sayd he, yf ye shewe it not to me Incontynent it shall repente you. She rose anone vp 't went to [her] cheste t brought the ryage to ye kynge. And as he sawe y' rynge he was half ashamed, I sayd vnto her, O howe lyke is the knyghtes rynge vnto this rynge, whyche I sawe vpon his fynger, and I bileued that it had ben my rynge, and therfore it was that I asked it of you so hastely after the rynge. And of this euyll suspecyon I yelde my selfe gylty ayenst you my dere lady, in this behalfe, for ye strength of the toure deceyued me, for I thynke yt noo man myght come therin, but I myself alone. She sayde, My dere lorde, wonds not for one rynge is lyke an other, for werke men make seldome ony werke, but ye other make the same. but god forgyue it you that ye have had me suspect whan ye knowe the strength of ye toure, I the keyes ye haue alway by you, I byleue no man therwt. After yt the knyght lete ordeyn a grete dyner t sayd to the kynge, my lorde it is so that my lady in loue is come out of my countre I have done to be made a feste or a dyner. I gladly I wolde pray you that at this tyme ye wyll doo me honour, I take suche mete as is in my house. The kynge sayd I shal gladly do you yt worshypp t more. The knight was therof glad, t by his secrete way went to the quene t sayd to her, My lady this day ye shal come to my house by my preuy way, I clothe you in ryche clothynge after the way of my countre, I ye shal syt at the table wt the kynge as my souerayne lady, I make hym good there. She sayd as ye wyll I shall it all thyges fulfyll. I whan the houre of mete was come, I the kynge from the castell was comyng towardes the knyghtes house, In the meane tyme the quene entred by the secrete way in to the knyghtes lodgynge 't apparayled her after the maner of the knyghtes countre. and whan the kynge was entred in to the house, she salued hym reuerently and receyued hym. and whan the kynge hadde beholden her he demaunded of the knyghte, what woman is this that is so fayr. Then yo knyght sayd my lorde it is my souerayne lady that now is come out of my countre after me. I have taryed longe in her seruyte. Then the knyght set the kynge att ye table as it behoued. It made the quene to syt by hym / I the kynge thoughte that it was his quene, and sayd win hymself, O how lyke is this woman vnto my wyfe. So ye strength of the toure deceyued hym, that he gaue more fayth and credence to ye knyghtes wordes than he dyde vnto his owne eyen. The quene begane for to speke t talke vnto the kynge and to styre hym for to ete and drynke I to make good chere. And whan as the kynge herde her voyce and speche than he sayd to hymselfe, O blessed lady, lyke is this woman vnto my quene, in her behauyng / in speche / in vysage / I in all other thynges I condycyons. and alwayes ye strengthe of the toure fayled hym. In the ende of yo mete, yo knyghte prayed his loue to synge a songe afore ye kyng the whiche began for to synge a songe of loue. whan as he herde that I knewe her voyce, he thought is not this my wyfe. How may it be she. have not I the keyes of ye toure my selfe in kepynge. and soo all the mete tyme he sate and strofe within hymselfe. Tho att the laste he sayde vnto the knyght that he sholde take vp the table for he hadde somwhat for too done for why that he sate in suche a grete thought, and aduysemet. The knyght answered and sayde, My lorde ye make noo good chere, ye are full of thoughtes. And yf it please you we shall make to you more sporte 't solace. And the woman sayd please it vou syr kynge here by vs tarye. we shall make you all the sporte 't solace that we can, lyke as yo quene is in her solace & conforte. He sayd take away the table, for I may no lenger abyde. Then the knyght at the commaundement of yo kynge toke vp the table, 't thanked theym all. And ye kynge wente hastely vnto the castell in serchynge whether yt the quene were win or not. And in the meane whyle the quene went vp by her preuy way, I put of her vppermost vestures I the kynge founde her in the same clothynge that he lefte her afore. Whan as the kynge was entred t so founde her, he embraced & kyssed her & sayd vnto her. This day I haue eten wt my knyghte and wt his loue that is come out of his countree. and sythen I was borne vnto this day myn eyen hath not sene two so lyke creatures in al thyng as she is to you and this mete tyme I haue be soo moche styred with dyuerse thynges yt I coude no lenger abyde there, but yt I muste come t serche whether ye were here or theyre. Tho sayd ye quene, Syr how myght ye thynke yt, for ye knowe well yt this toure is fast, L stronge ynoughe 't that no body can come in nor out wtout

you, for ye alone have alwayes the keye. How were it then possyble for me to be there. Ye fynde somtyme one man lyke on other and therfore ye sholde take none argumetes of mysdemyng or of suspycion, as ye late dyde of the rynge. The kynge sayd, that is true and therfore I knowlege my selfe gylty that I haue mysdemed you. After that came to hym ye knyght I sayd, My lorde I have of long tyme served your good grace, and now it is tyme that I retourne aven in to my countre I therfore for all the seruyce yt I have done vnto you I desyre of you but one thynge to do for me. y' my lorde ye whiche I entende to wedde in the face of the chyrche, which hath followed me out of ferre countrees, I her I shall brynge thyder aven as my laweful wyfe. Therfore I beseche and praye your noble grace that ye wyll do me this honour, that by your owne honde ye wyll gyue her afore the preest vnto me, the whiche shallbe vnto me greete honour and worshyp whan I come into my countree. The kynge answered, yt petycyon and more yf ye desyre it that shall I gladly doo and fulfyll it. The knyght prefyxed the daye of maryage. To the whiche daye this good kynge came to the chyrche worshypfully. The preest was redy ? stode indued we his vestymentes for to solemnyse the matrymonye. The knyght had the quene all redy apparayled in his owne house after his maner 't had ordeyned two knyghtes for to lede her to the chyrche, they byleuynge that it had ben his And whan they were before in the face of ye chyrche ye preest sayd, who shall gyue this woman vnto this knyght. Then the kynge sayd, I shall gyue her to myn owne knyght. and toke her by the hande I sayd vnto her, O good woman ye are moche lyke vnto my quene, and therfore I loue you the better, and also for that ye be my knyghtes wyfe and shall be of my house. and putte the quenes hande in to ve knyghtes hand. and yo preest afte yo maner of the chyrche hath bounde 't wedded them togyder. and whan all this was fynysshed 't done the knyghte sayd vnto ye kyng, Syr my shyb y' I entende to go in towardes my countre is all redy to make sayle wherfore I humbly beseche hyghly your moost noble grace that it wyl please you for to accompany my wylfel therunto I that we will advertise I enfourme her that she love me I have me in favoure above all other creatures lyuynge, and the rather for your gode excytacyon & doctryne. Thenne the kynge with a grete multytude of people went with theym't accompanyed theym vnto the shyppe of whoos departynge many of them were dolaunte to the shyppe. the kynge began to say vnto the quene, my moost dere frende, herken now well vnto my counseyll and folowe it, for it shall be for your honour I proufyte. My knyght hath now here wedded I done to you al ye worshypp yt in hym is. wherfore loke yt ye love I honour hym above all erthly creatures I yt hath god commaunded I that ye be too hym true I obedyent. It as this was sayd he delyuered her vnto ye knyght saynge my blessyng go wt you both, I our lorde kepe I conduyte you in sauete to your countre. Then the knyght and the quene bowed and enclyned down her hedes vnto ye kynge. It thanked hym of all thyngs and they commytted hym to god and entred in to the shyppe and the maryners haled up the sayles and sayled forth afore the wynde soo that win a short tyme the kyng had lost ye syght of the shyp. And from then he went hastely to ye castell I myssed the quene. I whan he founde her not / he was meued in all the partes of his body. It sought all about yo toure and serched, tyll at laste he founde yo hole or yo secrete way yt the knyght had made. It as he saw that, than cryed he and weped and sayd, Alas alas this knyght in whom I hadde so grete confydence I truste hath taken away my wyfe, was I not a fole yt I gaue more fayth in to his words then I dyde to myne owne eyen. Than sayd thempresse, My lorde haue ye vnderstand what I haue sayde. Themperour sayd ryght wel in ye best wyse. Then sayd thempresse, remember how yt he trusted the knyghte I yet he deceyued hym. In the same manere wyse ye have confydence in the seven wyse maysters / and they laboure for to destroye me that am your wyfe. It ye gyue more fayth vnto theyr wordes than ye do vnto your owne eyen. for ye haue well sene how yt youre sone rente and scratched me. Wherof yet I bere and haue the tokens I the markes as ye may see. And also ye knowe well how that your cursed sone hath me ashamed 't ye marke not howe they defende hym in his foly and falshede. Therfore it is to be dradde yt it shall happen to you as it dyde to the kynge that: too you I haue spoken of. Themperour sayd, I byleue myn. eyen better than theyr wordes. I therfore I say you yt to morowe I shall do justyce of hym. On ye morowe the Emperour commaunded that his sone sholde be hanged. Tho began ayen a grete noyse in and [bewailing amongst the common people for the death of the Emperor's only son. At last when the seventh master heard it, he ran immediately unto the officers, which were leading him to the gallows, and said: My friends, I pray you not to make overmuch haste but stay your hands a while, for I think this day (with the help of the Almighty God) to save him from all perils; and from thence the master hasteth himself to the Emperor's Palace, and did him reverence according to his accustomed duty. But the Emperor with great indignation made him this answer: Never more have you any joy in this world, for that you have sent my son home untaught and dumb, whom I delivered unto you well speaking, for which cause you shall all be put to death with him. The master answered: O most noble Emperor, the time is not long betwixt this and tomorrow noon; then (by the grace of God) you shall hear him speak discreetly, and shall declare the truth of all things, and this I promise you he will perform to the full, upon pain of my life, if you will spare him so long a time; if you find it not so, then take my life and the lives of us all. Then said the Emperor: If I might but hear my son speak, it would give me sufficient content, and I would not desire longer to live. Then answered the master: All this and more you shall hear and see, and confess it to be true, if you will but abide this little time: and then the strife that hath been betwixt us and the Empress will clearly be decided. And if you suffer him to be put to death through the words of your most ungodly wife; I tell you of a truth it shall happen worse to you than it did to a knight that died for a little blood that he saw his wife to bleed, to whom afterwards she was most unnatural. Then said the Emperor: That example I would fain hear. Then said the master: Let your son be called again, and I shall tell you so notable an example that during your life you may beware of the unsteadfastness of woman. Then the Emperor said: I shall go call my son again upon condition that tomorrow I shall hear him speak as you have promised. The master said: Do that, my lord, for it shall so be. : And began to tell as followeth.]

The Example of the Seuenth Mayster.

There was a knyght yt had a fayre yonge wyfe whome he entyrely loued in so moche that he coude not be out of her syght. It hapned on a tyme yt they played togyder at the chesse, I yo knyght by chaunce helde a knyfe in his hande I she playing fortuned to smyte her hand vpon ye knyf, yt a lytel blode began to appere. Whan yo knyght sawe that his wyfe bled he sorowed moche and was sore aferde of his wyfe yt he fel to the grounde in a swoune. his wyfe cast colde water vpon his vysage, yt he a lytell came ayen too hymselfe 't sayd lyghtely call the curate wt the holy sacramente for I muste deve for the blood yt I have seen come out of your fynger hath smyten the deth to my herte. The preest came and houseled hym. 't anone after he dyed wtout ony taryeng, for whoos deth there was made grete sorowe 't bewaylynges and specyally of ye wyfe. And after that the obsequyes 't buryenge was done accordynge she went and lay vpon the buryel or graue and there she made the gretest sorowe of the worlde, and sayd that she wolde neuer departe from thens, but as a turtyll douue she wolde for the loue of her husbonde there abyde t dye. Tho went her fren[ds] vnto her and sayd what auayleth this for his soule to lyue I dye here, it is better yt ye go to your house 't gyue almes for ye loue of god 't yt shal more auayle his soule, than in this place to abyde. To whom she answerd be styll ye are euyll counselours. Consyder not ye how I am fro hym seperate I departed by his deth for a lytell blode yt he sawe com out of my hond or fynger, I therfore I shall neuer fro hens departe. Her frendes herynge yt lete make a lytell house or lodgynge nygh vnto ye graue, I put therin all thynges yt to her was necessarye t went theyr wayes thynkynge that within a whyle she sholde be wery to be alone, I so desolate from all company t yt therby she sholde desyre ayen ye company of people. In yt cyte was thenne a lawes (sic) yt whan a trespassour or offendour ayenst the lawe were hanged, yt ye shyryf all yt nyght sholde watche I kepe the body all armed, I yf it hapned yt the body of hym hanged were stolen away, ye seryf sholde lese all his londe, 't his lyfe at ye kynges pleasure. It hapned sone after yt the knyghte was dede a man to be hanged for trepasse that he had done, so that ye sheryf after ye lawe of the londe all the nyght watched by ye galowes yt was not fer fro ye cyte, 't ye chyrcheyerde was not ferre from the walles of ye same. Tho became ye sheryf so colde yt he wyst not but to dye for colde, wtout the rather yt he myghte warme hym. it was so feruent a colde 't so stronge a froste, and he behelde fro thens about hym 't sawe ye fyre in ye chyrcheverde, I hasted hym I came therto, I whan he was come he called I knocked at the lytyll house. The woman spake who is that yt at this houre is knockynge at ye house of this sorowfull woman. I am ye shyref that so moche colde suffreth yt wtout anone ye late me in I shall frese to deth. She sayd, I fere me yf that I lete you come in ye sholde shewe me such wordes yt sholde cause me for to be more heuyer. It he sayd I promyse vnto you yt I shall saye no wordes to your dyspleasure. Then lete she hym in. and whan he awhyle had sytten by yo fyre 't was well warmed he sayd to her, O fayre woman wt your lycence wolde I fayne speke but one worde vnto you. She answered to hym, syr say what it pleaseth you. He sayd, O lady ye be a fayr gentyl woman ryche ? yonge. were it not better I more conuenyent for you to dwell at home in your house I to gyue almesse than to destroye I consume your lyfe here wt wepynes t cryenges. She sayde syr knyght had I knowen this afore ye had not come herin for I say to you, as I have sayd too other oftentymes, ye knowe well yt my husbonde loued me so well that for a lytyll bloode yt he sawe me blede on one of my fyngers he is dede, wherfore I shall here deve for the loue of hym. As the knyght herde this he toke leve and wente to the galowes 't whan he was there come, he sawe yt the theef that he left there hangynge was stolen 't caryed awaye, 't began therfore to wexe heuy I full of sorowe, I sayd, wo is me what shall I do for I have loste my lyfe and all my good. And he goynge thus full of sorowe 't heuvnesse, 't wyste not whyche waye to torne hym or to go, at the laste bethought hym to go to yt deuoute 't desolate lady, 't shewe vnto hyr ye heuynesse of his herte, to wyte yf yt she coude gyue hym ony gode counseyll. And whan he was theder come he called, I she axed the cause of his knockynge. Tho sayd he, madame I am the shyref that was here ryght now wt you, I wolde feyne shewe you ye secretes of myn herte. Therfore I praye you for ye loue of god open the dore, and he wente in I sayd to her O moost vertuous lady I come to haue your counseyll and aduys, for ye knowe well yo lawe of yo londes are that whan so euer ony man is hanged 't stolen awaye of the galowes, than the shyref his lyfe and godes be in ye kynges handes. Nowe it is happened in ye tyme that I was here with you 't warmed me, ye theef is stolen away frome ye galowes, therfore I praye you for the loue of god gyue me your aduys what is me beste to do. She answered I have compassyon vpon you, for by the lawe ye have loste lyfe It goodes to yokynge. Do nowe after my counseyll, It ye shall neyther lese lyfe ne godes. He answered therfore I came to you hopynge to haue gode comforth. She sayd wyll ye than promyse to take me to your wyfe. the knyght answered, wolde god that ye wolde do yt, but I fere me leste yt ye wolde dysdevne so moche to humble you too me y' am so pore a knyght. She sayd I gyue you my wyl therto, 't he yaue her ayen his wyll I consented too be her knyght durynge his lyfe. Tho sayd she, ye knowe well yt suche a daye my lorde was buryed whiche for yo loue of me deved, take hym oute of his sepulture, It go hange hym in stede of ye theef. The knyght answered lady your courseyll is good. Tho went they togyder I opened the grave I drewe hym out. The knyght sayd howe shall we nowe doo, by cause or the theef was taken, two of his vpper tethe were smyten oute, I fere me yf yt were perceyued I shold be dede. She sayd to hym, take a stone and stryke oute two of his tethe. The knyght answered, madame yt may not do for while he lyued he was my wel beloued felowe 't it sholde be to me a grete rebuke, yf I comytted soo dysloyall a dede vnto his body beynge dede. She answered for your love I shall do it, I toke a stone I smote out two of his tethe, I sayd to the shyref, take hym 't hange him vpon ye galowes lyke to ye theef. The knyght sayde I fere me to do it, for ye theef in takynge of hym was wounded in y hede, I he wanted both his eres, I therfore yf it were serched I founde otherwyse, it sholde be to my vtter vndoynge. Than sayd she, take out your swerde I make hym a grete wounde in his hede, I cut of his eres. O madame god forbede yt I do yt to the dede body yt I loued so well in hys lyfe. Than sayd she, gyue me your swerde I shal for yo loue of you do it. I toke yo swerde I smote a manly stroke vpon ye dede manes forhede, I cut of bothe his eres. And whan she hadde thus done, sayd, now take I hange hym wtout company. It than ye knyght answered, yet I fere me to hange hym, for ye theef wanted both his stones, I yf that were serched t founde wtout, all your labour were in vayn.

Then sayd she, I sawe neuer so feerfull a man seyng ye mater so clere I sure. Take a knyfe I cut of his stones. And he answered, yt may I not do in no wyse and therfore I pray you spare me, I ye knowe well what a man is w'out his stones. She sayd for ye loue of you I shall do it. And toke ye knyf in her hande I cutte of husbondes stones, and [sayd] to hym, nowe take this churle thus dysfygured and hange hym vp withoute drede. And went forth togyder and henge vp the body vpon yo galowes I so was the shyref delyuered out of the kynges daunger. Tho sayd yo lady, now be ye quyte of all your daungeours I fere I all thy sorowes by my counseyll. And therfore I wyll yt ye wedde me in ye face of ye chyrche. The knyghte sayde I haue made a vowe yt I shal neuer wed other as longe as ye lyue, which I wyl holde, but afterwarde he sayd, O ye moost shameful t worst woman of al wymen who wolde take ye to his wyfe. An honourable 't a louynge knyght was thy husbonde, whiche for a lytel blode yt he sawe of thy fynger shed dyed. now haste yu smyten out two of his tethe, yu haste cutte of his eeres, I his stones, 't yu haste made hym a grete wounde in his hede, what deuyll wolde wed ye, I by cause yt yu shal neuer shame more good man, I shal rede ye, I drewe his swerde I wt one stroke he smote of her hede. The mayster sayd, My lorde haue ye vnderstande what I haue sayd. The emperour sayd, ryght well. Amonges all wymmen was this ye worste 't the knyght rewarded her accordynge so as she sholde no more men shame. And themperour sayd more ouer, O my good mayster myght I ones here my sone speke I sholde gyue no charge of my lyfe. Tho sayd the mayster, To morowe ye shall here hym speke afore you I afore al ye lordes of thempyre, I he shall shewe ye very trouth of all ye varyaunce betwyxte vs I thempresse as I hope. I toke his leue of themperour I departed.

How yt Dyoclesyan themperours sone complayned on thempres, I how yt he excused him of her complaynt.

And after wtall the maysters assembled togydr I toke theyr counseyll how 't in what maner they shold brynge out ye chylde of pryson I lede to the palays. I tho they went to ye chylde there as he laye in pryson afore the mydday his wyll It his coursely to here. To whome yo childe sayd, what yo shall please you, shall please me, but in no wyse beave you not howe y' I shall answere, or what I shall saye, for w' joye I shal answere to all thynges y' shal be demaunded of me. Whan ye seven maysters therde yt they were syght glad, I clothed hym in purpure I in clothe of golde. It two maysters went afore hym, I one on his right honde, an other on his lyfte honde, It we other thre followed hym after. It afore them al went xxiiii men wt dynerie instruments of musyke & brought hym wignete meledy and honour to ye palays. And whan themperour herde al this melody, he demaunded what it was. Then it was tolde hym, Syr emperour it is your sone, you which cometh tofore you t afore all your lordes to speke and excuse hymselfe of all thynges yt are layde to his charge / Themperour sayd, yt is good tydynges, myght I here my sone speke. And whan ye chylde was come to ye palays he ran vnto his fader I sayd vnto hym, hayle fader I my moost honourable. And whan themperour herde ye voyce of his sone he was so glad y' for joye he fyl downe to y' erthe. but y' chylde toke hym lyghtly vp ayen. and whan he was come ayen to hymself, tho begā [the son to declare the whole matter to his father, and there came so great a multitude to the palace to hear the child speak, and the noise of them was so great that the child could not be heard. The emperour considering that, caused money to be thrown into the streets, that the people therwith should be busied out of the palace, the better to hear the child speak; but they regarded not the money. When the emperor perceived that he commanded silence on pain of death. And when they were all still, the child began to speak as followeth: O most dear father, before I speak anything, I entreat you that the empress with all her chamber-maids may be present. So the emperor commanded the empress with all her maids to come without delay. The empress hearing that (in great fear) came with her maids; and the child bade them to stand before the people in a row that he might see them. Then said the child, Sir, behold the_chamber-maid that standeth there in green (whom ye know the empress loveth above all others), command her to be uncloathed before us all, and see what she is. The emperor said, Dear son, that would shame us all, to have a woman stand naked before us. He said, If it be a woman it is my shame; if not, let the shame abide in her. When she was uncloathed she appeared to be a man, whereat they wondered.]

[The Complaint of the Emperor's Son on the Empress.]

Thenne sayd the sone vnto the fader, beholde this rybaude that many a nyghte hathe with your wyfe lyen in your chamber in auoutrye, I have defouled your bedde. I therfore the empresse loued hym so well, the whiche ye knewe not. whan the emperour sawe yt he was impacyent I wrothe, yt he comaunded yt she with yo rybaude sholde be brent. yo sone sayd, lorde fader make no haste of yt iugement before that I have reproved her of the cryme yt she layde vpon me falsely, I that she vntruly I falsly hathe complayned I lyed vpon me. Tho sayd the fader, My dere sone I comytte all the iugemente in to your hands. The sone answered yf she be founde false I a lyer yo lawe shall iuge her. But my dere fader whan ye sent after me at yo instaunce of hyr, then I with my maysters behelde the sterres in yo fyrmamente. I there we sawe yt yf I sholde speke ony worde within seven dayes I sholde have deved a shamefull dethe, and therefore that was the cause that I spake not. And where as the empresse sayd ? put vnto me, that I wolde have oppressed I rauysshed hyr, in yt she lyeth falsly but she dyd hyr best: to have caused me to do it. And whan she in no wyse coude bryng me therto, she toke me paper penne it ynke, it badde me wryte the cause why yt I refused her. And whan yt I had wryten yt I wolde not do or commytte so greate L abhomynable synne, and also wolde not my faders orcharde defoule, the began she to tere hyr clothes I scratche her vysage yt it ran on blode, it cryed wt a loude voyce, it comytted vnto me the cryme or blame. And whan yo Emperoure herde this he behelde her wt a fell countenaunce, and sayd to her in this maner, O thou wretched woman was it not suffycyent to fulfyll thy foule I lecherous appetyte I I thy rybaude, but wolde also have hadde my sone. Than fell. the Empresse to themperours fote I she cryed hym mercy. Then yo Emperoure sayd, O thou cursyd I most vnhappy woman thou askest forgyuenesse I thou art worthy none to haue, for yu haste descrued to dye in thre maner wyse. The fyrst is yt yu haste done auoutrye. The seconde is that thou haste prouoked and styred my sone to syne I haste to hym commytted, I layde yo cryme falsely I vntruly. And yo thyrde yt thou haste euery daye entyced I prouoked me wt thy false tales for to put hym to dethe. 't therfore ye lawe shall have yo course vpon ye, I iuge the to the dethe.

Then sayd the sone, Fader ye knowe well, that for yo lesynge that she lyed vpon me, I was dayly lad to hangynge. But god with the helpe of my maysters hathe delyuered me. O my moost honourable fader, it was sayd vnto you by ye Empresse that I wolde also by yo helpe of my maysters depose you out of youre Empyre, I that I laboured to dystroye you, I for to sette me in your place. Sholde not ye then have sorowed, Ye have the Empyre to governe, I wherfore shold I not holde you for my fader. God defende that, for of you I have my lyuyng. And I shall holde and repute you for my souerayne lorde and fader durynge the terme of my lyfe. And I will not in ony manere depryue you of youre honoure, but I shall laboure and besye my selfe about the gouernaunce of ye same, and all your comaundementes I shall fulfyll in every thynge. But it is in lyke wyse as the fader caste his sone in to the see for too drowne hym, bycause he sayd yt he in tyme comynge sholde be his lorde, I yet ye sone by the helpe of god was saued, and was made a gretter lorde than he was, 't yet was it no hynderaunce to the fader but prouffyte. Also ye sholde see I remembre yt my lyfe I gouernaunce shall neuer hynder you but it shal be to your greate solace I joye. Than sayd ye Emperoure, blessed be almyghty god t the houre yt I euer begate you, I deserued to haue such a sone yt I fynde soo wyse I good in all thynges. Telle me nowe an example by ye whiche I maye parfytly thy wysdome vnderstande, & that myn herte maye the better joye in the. Thenne sayd the sone fyrst comaunde sylence to your people yt I be not letted in my wordes tyll yt I haue done. And whan yt it is ended, gyue sentence wt yo ryght wysnesse of the lawe vpon me and vpon the Empresse. The comaunded the Emperour sylence. It the chyld began to tell in maner as hereafter followeth.

The Example of Dyoclesyan the Emperours sone.

There was a knyght whiche hadde but one sone that he loued ryght moche in begynnynge as ye nowe all onely haue me, whome he delyuered to a mayster of ferre countrees to nourysshe I to lerne. yo chylde was of a grete wytte I prouffyted moche and grewe as well in lernynge as in body. And whan he had dwelled with his mayster seuen yere, his fader desyred to see hym, 't sent letters to hym yt he sholde come ayen in to his countree I vysyte his frendes in lyke wyse as ye haue sente for me. The chylde was obedyent to his fader 't came at his comaundement of whos comynge he joyed moche, for yt he was as well growen in his membres as in doctryne. To euery man he appered pleasaunt and gentylle. It happened vpon a daye yt the fader and the moder syttynge at ye table, & the chylde seruynge theym, a nyghtyngale came fleynge afore ye wyndowe where as they satte, I began for to synge so swetely yt they merueyled. And ye knyght sayd, O how swetely this byrde syngeth. well were hym yt coude vnderstande his songe, I coude shew the interpretacyon therof. Thenne the sone sayd, my worshypfull fader the song of the nyghtyngale I coude well declare, but I fere your dysplesure. The fader sayd, saye hardely my sone ye interpretacyon of ye byrde, I than ye shall proue whether I shall be angry or not, but I shall marke well ye reason of myn angre. 't whan ye sone herde ye he sayd, ye nyghtyngale hath sayd in his songe, that I shall become a grete lorde, yt I shall be honoured t worshypped of all men, t namely of my fader, the whiche shall brynge the water for to wasshe in myn handes, and my moder shall holde the towell. The fader sayd thou shall neuer see yt day suche seruyce of ys to haue, nor none suche dygnyte shall followe the, and in greate malyce I wodenesse he toke his sone vppon his sholders I ranne to the see I cast hym in it, and sayd, Lye there the interpretatour of ye byrdes songe. The chylde coude swymme, and swymmed to a londe where he was foure dayes without mete or drynke. The fyft daye there came a shyp saylynge, and as the chyld sawe that, he called loude to the shypmen 't sayd for the loue of god delyuer me frome the peryll of dethe. The shypmen sawe that it was a fayre yonge man they had compassyon on hym and went with theyr bote and sette hym aborde and in to ferre countrees with them. they ledde hym and solde hym there to a duke. The chylde grewe goodly and fayre, I the duke loued hym moche, I hadde him gretely in his fauoure. Uppon a tyme the kynge of yt realme lete calle and assemble all the greate lordes t noble men of his londe to a generall counsell.

This duke prepared I ordeyned hym to go to yo counsell, I marked the wysdome I the wytte of the chylde I toke the chylde with hym. And whan they were all gadred t assembled before the kynge in his counseyll My welbeloued lordes I frendes sayd yo kynge, wylle ye wete yo cause wherfore yt I haue called you to this counseylle. Then sayd they all we be all souerayne lorde at your commaundemente. Then yo kynge sayd, It is a secrete mater yt I shall shewe you, yf yt ony man can open it I declare what yt it sygnyfyeth, I swere I promytte vnto hym by my crowne yt I shall gyue too hym myn only doughter in maryage, I he shal be my felowe in my realme duryng my lyfe, I after my dethe he shall haue I possede all the hole kyngedome, I ye mystery of the counseyll is this. Thre rauons alwayes followe me where so euer that I goo. they leue me not, but cry wt suche horryble voyces, yt it is grete payne for me to here them, I to beholde theyr lokynges. I therfore yf ther be ony man yo whiche that knoweth the cause of theyr followynge, I can shewe what they mene by theyr cryenge I voyde theym fro me, w'out doubte I shall fulfyll this promyse yt I have made. It as the kynge had thus sayd, there was none founde in all the counseyll yt wyst the cause or coude moue or put awaye the rauons. Then sayd yo chylde too the duke. My lorde thynke ye that the kynge wyl holde his promyse or worde yf I accomplysshe his wyll and desyre. Than ye duke sayde I thynke he wyll holde yt he hath promysed, but wyl ye yt I gyue the kynge knowledge of you what ye can do.

Then ye chylde sayd, I wyl my lyfe set in pledge I I shall perfourme 't make it good yt I haue sayd. Whan ye duke herde that he went to the kynge 't sayd, My lorde the kyng, here is a yong man that is ryght connynge I wyse, the whiche promyseth for to satysfye 't fulfyl in al thynges your desyre as touchynge the rauons yf ye wyll fulfyll that ye haue promysed. The kynge swore by the crowne of his kyngdome, what I haue promysed in al thynges shalbe fulfylled. Tho brought he ye chylde before the kynge, and whan the kynge sawe hym he spake to hym. O fayre chylde can ye gyue answere to my questyon. The chylde sayd, my lorde ye in the best wyse, your questyon is wherfore yt the rauons followe you't horrybly crye vpon you. To whiche I answere. Upon a tyme it hapned that two rauons a male I a female had brought forthe bytwene them the thyrde rauon. vpon the sayd se was so grete famyne I scarsytee of all maner of thynges yt men bestes I foules dyed I perysshed for defaute. The thyrde rauon yt tyme beynge yonge in the nest the moder lefte it sekynge where she myght best gete her lyuynge, I came no more to ye neste. The male rauon seynge that with grete penurye and laboure fed the yong rauon tyll that he was able to flye and whan the dere tyde was passed and gone then the female rauon came ayen too the yonge rauon and wolde holde felysshyppe and company with hym. And as the male rauon sawe that, he wolde haue dryuen her away, saynge thus, that she in his grete myscheyf and necessyte lefte hym and his company, and therfore nowe she sholde wante his company and felysshyppe. She alledged and sayd that she had in his byrthe grete laboure and sorowe, and suffred penurye, and therfore of his company she sholde rather joye than the fader. For this my souerayne lorde they followe you askynge the ryght jugement whiche of them both shal have the yonge rauon in theyr company, and this is the cause of theyr horryble clamour and noyse that they make dayly ypon you. But my lorde hadde ye hereupon a ryght wysse sentence gyuen ye sholde neuer more see theym or be troubled w' theyr cryenge. Tho sayd the kynge, for the cause that the moder hath left I forsaken the yonge rauen in his mooste necessyte, it standeth with reason t iustyce yt she shall wante 't be without his felyshyp. And where yt she sayth I alledgethe yt in the berynge I byrth of hym she hadde greate payne and traueyle, that helpeth her not, for yt payne was torned in to joye as sone as she sawe the yonge rauen in the worlde. But for yt the male is yo cause of produccyon I generacyon in euery beste, I also yt he the yong rauon in his necessyte sustayned I fedde in to the recoueryng I nourysshynge of his body, therfore I gyue for a iugement It for a sentence dyffinityue yt the yonge rauen shall abyde I holde company wt the fader and not with the moder. And whan the rauons herde this sentence, with a greate noyse I crye they flewe up in the ayre I were no more seen ne founde in all that Regyon. Whanne that this was doone ye kynge demaunded of the yonge man what his name was. He answered I am called Alexander. Tho sayd the kynge, I wyll haue one thynge of you, yt ye frome hens forth shal name I take me I none other for your fader but me, for ye shall marye my doughter, and ye shall be possessour of all my realme. The yonge Alexander abode and dwelled stylle with the kynge, and every man hadde too hym favour and love, for he began to haunt and occupy hymselfe in iustes 't in tourneys, wherin at all tymes he had the pryse aboue all other. y' were in all Egypte, soo y' his pere or lyke was not founde, I there was not so harde nor so obscure a questyon put vnto hym but yt he coude assoyle it. At that tyme was there an Emperoure named Tytus, that excelled in gentylnesse, curtesy ? curposyte [curiosity] of all other Emperours kynges and prynces in ye worlde. In so moche yt suche a fame I noyse flewe I ranne ouer all the worlde of it, yt what so ever he was yt wolde prouffyte in connynge maners or behauynge, that he sholde go to the Emperours courte. And whan Alexander herd that he sayd to the kynge my most honourable fader I lorde ye wote well that al the worlde is full of the fame of themperoure so yt it is delectable to abide I dwel in hys courte wherfore yf it please yow my lorde 't fader I wolde gladly go to hys court that, I myght be wyser I prompter in maners I behauynge than I Thereupon answered ye kynge, It pleaseth me ryght well, but I wolde that ye take with you plente of golde t. syluer t other necessaryes, so moche yt ye myn honoure ther wt may saue, I yt ye may have also yt is to you requysyte I behouefull. And also me semeth it were expedyent yt ye afore your departyng sholde mary my doughter. Alexander wyll it please you my lorde too spare me at this tyme It at my comynge home ayen I shall wedde hir wt all honoure as to her apperteyneth. The kynge answered, sythen it is your wyll to go to themperours court I lycence you and therto I consente. Alexander toke leue of the kynge, 't toke with hym tresoure ynoughe 't went to themperours courte. And whan he was come with a fayre companye, he wente afore the Emperoure & felle on his knees, and salued hym & dyd hym Themperoure rose frome his sete impervall and kyssed hym, I asked of hym of whens I what he was, I: wherfore he was comen. He answered and sayd I am sone 't heyre to the kynge of Egypte, I am come to do seruyce to: your moost hyghe maieste yf it please you to accepte me.. Themperour sayd yt he was ryght welcome, I comytted hym to his stewarde and made hym his keruer. The stewarde ordeyned hym a fayre chamber I purueyed hym all thynges yt were necessary to the same. And Alexander behaued hym sowell I wysely yt in shorte tyme of all people he was beloued. Not longe after that came ye kynges sone of Fraunce to doseruyse to themperoure I to lerne nurture, whome themperour receyued honourably and demaunded his name ? of what kynred he was come. He answered I am sone to the kynge of Fraunce, & I have to name Lodwyke your servaunte. Thosayd the Emperoure I have made Alexander my karuer, I ye shall be my cuppe berer. yt alwayes ye shall do seruyse afore me at my table. E comaunded his stewarde to assygne hym a lodgynge, whome he assygned wt Alexander in his chamber. These were soo lyke in stature, in vysage, in condycyons yt vnneth ye one myght be dyscerned fro ye other. but yt Alexander was more in conyng & lyghtlyer in his dedes than Lodwyke was, for Lodwyk was a femynyne man t shamfast. T these two yong men loued well togyder. This Emperoure had a doughter oonly, named Florentyne, ye which was ryght fayr I gracyous, I shold be his heyre whome he loued entyerly, which had a courte by her selfe I seruauntes to her assygned. To whome yo Emperour every daye was accustomed to sende frome his table of his devntes, in tokenyng of loue by yo hande of Alexander, wherupon yo doughter began to have hym meruaylouslye in her fauoure bycause of his wysdome I his gracyous demenure. It hapned vpon a day Alexander at the mete tyme had suche a besynesse yt he serued not at yo table nor none other gaue attendaunce for hym in his rowme. Lodwyk perceyued yt ?t serued in his stede. And whan he had serued the Emperoure in his last seruyce vpon his knee, ye Emperoure comaunded hym to bere a dysshe vnto his doughter as he was wonte to do, thynkyng hym to be Alexander. Tho toke Lodwyke yo dysshe I yede to yo palays of the Emperours doughter I salued her wt grete reuerence I set yo mete afore her. but vnto yt tyme he had not seen her she perceyued anone yt it was not Alexander, I sayd to hym in this manere. What is your name, I whose sone are ye. I he answered to hyr I sayd, Madame I am ye kynges sone of Fraunce, I my name is Lodwyk. She sayd I thanke you of your laboure. In yo mene tyme came Alexander to ye table. It they fulfylled ther seruyce. The dyner done anone Lodwyk went to his bedde sore seke. And Alexander apperceyuynge that went to his chamber & sayd to hym, O my best beloued frende I felowe Lodwyk how is it with you, I what is yo cause of your infyrmite. He answered hym and sayd, ye cause of it I knowe not but I fele me soo seke yt I fere me I can not escape ye dethe. Alexander sayd yo cause of your infyrmyte and dysease I knowe well. For to daye whan as ye bare the mete vnto the Emperours doughter, ye behelde hyr vysage 't beaute so feruently, yt your herte is taken 't rauysshed wt her loue. Therupon he answered, O Alexander all the physysyans in the worlde coude not more truly iuge my sekenesse, but I fere it shall be my dethe. Then sayd Alexander, Be of good comforth and I shall helpe you vnto my power. It yede vnto the market I bought wt his owne moneye a fayre clothe sette with precyous stones, vnknowynge to Lodwyke I presented it on his behalue vnto the mayden. It as she sawe y' she asked hym where he myght that costely I precyouse cloth fynde to bye. I he sayd, Madame it is the sone of yo moost crysten kynge yt sendeth it vnto you for youre love, for he but for one syght yt he hathe had of you is so seke yt he lyeth upon his bed unto the dethe. It therfore yf ye suffre hym to perysshe ye shall neuer recouer ayen your honouse. Tho sayd she, O Alexander wolde ye this counseyll me yt I shold soo lese my vyrgynyte. God defende that. It be ye sure Alexander yt of suche messages ye shall neuer more haue ne wyn thanke. Therfore go ye out of my syght 's speke no more therof to me. whanne Alexander herde that he dyd his obeysaunce and departed. ye nexte daye Alexander went ayen to the cyte I bought a chaplet that was two tymes more in value than ye cloth, and therwith he yede to yo maydens chamber I yaue it to hyr on the behalue of Lodwyke. And whan she sawe that costely gyfte she sayd vnto hym in this manere. I marueyle of you yt soo oftentymes as ye haue seen and spoken with me, that ye haue not done your owne erande or spoken for your selfe but for an other. Then he answered, O madame I haue not ben so disposed, by cause that my byrthe is not to be compared with yours. And also it happened me neuer suche a case that my herte was so wounded, it he yt hathe a gode felawe is bounde for to doo hym good I true felysshyp. And thereore moost eccellent pryncesse of youre moost habundauwte pyte haue compassyon vpon hym ? make hym hole that ye have se wounded vnto ye deth that it be not for euer layde vnto your crueltee I impyteouse herte. She answered hym, go your wayes for at this tyme I wyll gyue you none answere therof. And as he herde yt he toke his leue ? departed. And the thyrde daye he wente vnto the market ? boughte a gyrdell yt thre tymes was more in value I costelyer than the chaplet was, I presented it vnto her on the behalue of Lodwyk. And whan she sawe 't behelde y' so precyouse, she sayd vnto Alexander, Saye to Lodwyk yt he come to my chamber aboute yo thyrde hour in yo nyght, and he shall fynde ye dore open. It Alexander herynge that, he was glad, It went to his felow and sayd, My beste beloued felowe be ye of gode comforth, for I have conquered ye mayden vnto you, and in this nyght I shall brynge you vnto hyr chamber. And whah y' was sayd, he stert vp as thoughe that he hadde wakened out of his slepe, I was well reuyued I for grete ioye he was made all hole. And yo next nyght followynge Alexander toke Lodwyke I brought hym vnto the chamber of ye lady w' whome he was in solace I joye all the nyght, I fro yt tyme forth all hyr herte was vpon hym so yt there was but one loue betwyxt them bothe. And after yt Lodwyke vsed her oftentymes to vysyte. So yt it came by processe of tyme to the eres of yo knyghtes of ye courte, how yt the Emperours doughter was knowen by Lodwyke: It conspyred amonges them selfe how yt they myght hym therwith all fynde, I hym to take or sle. As Alexander had knowlege therof, he armed hym to withstande them. And whan the knyghtes vnderstode yt they ferynge Alexander suffred his felowe to go in peas, ? Alexander many tymes put hym selfe in ieopardye for hym, he not knowynge therof, but ye mayde knewe it welle. In shorte tyme after yt there came letters to Alexander of the dethe of the kynge of Egypt yt he sholde hastely come and receyue his kyngdome with honour L

joye, and that shewed he anone too the mayden and to Lodwyk. and also of his departynge, wherof they were sorowfull & heuy. he sayd also vnto yo emperour, My mooste redoubted lorde please it you for to vnderstande that I have receyued letters of the deth of my fader. Wherfore it behoueth me to go 't receyue ye kyngdome, and that ye wyll lycence me to depart, and for all benefetes to [me] done I offre my selfe 't all my godes, 't rather then I shokle by my goynge awaye offende or dysplese you my lorde I shall forsake all my realme I all yt I haue in yo world, I abyde wt you styll. Then sayd y Emperoure, knowe ye for certayne yt of your departynge I am ryght heuy for ye were vnto me the beste seruaunt that was in all my house. But it becometh not an Emperoure to lette his seruauntes frome ther promocyons, or auauncementes, but soner to promote theym vnto hygher I gretter honoure. Therfore go ye vnto oure tresourer, 't he shall delyuer you as moche golde as ye wyll haue, It in you name of god I with my blessynge go in to your countre. and thus Alexander had leue of yo Emperoure t bad farewell, I many of yo courte were sorowfull of his departynge, for of all he was beloued. Lodwyk wt the mayden brought hym on his waye well seuen myle. After that Alexander wolde not suffre theym for to go further. then fell they both to ye grounde for grete sorow? Alexander toke? lyfte them bothe vp aven from ye erthe, I comforted theym with fayre I swete wordes and sayd, O Lodwyke my moost beloued felawe, I warne you yt the secretes beynge betwyxt you I my lady, ye hyde them I kepe them as preuely as ye may I take good hede to all thynges, for I wore an other shall come and be in my stede, that shall enuy you of the fauoure & grace, yt ye stande in wt the Emperoure and daye I nyght shall lye in a wayte to take you wha faute, It to put you to a rebuke. Then answered Lodwyk I sayd, O Alexander I shall be ware as moche as to me is possyble, but how shall I nowe do whan I wante your company, therfore one thynge I shall desyre of you yt ye wyl take this rynge of me for a remembraunce. Then sayd he I shall for the love of you gladly receive your rynge, I yet sholde I neuer woute ye rynge forgete you, I comytted them too god. Then! they embraced eche other aboute ye necke 't kyssed, and so departed frome other. Not longe after vt the kynges sone of Spayne named Guydo was receyued of the Emperoure in ye rowme 't place of Alexander, to whome the stewarde assygned Alexanders place t chamber, whiche was sore ayenste yo wyll of Lodwyke, but he coude not amende it. Guydo perceyuynge yt Lodwyke ayenst his wyll had hym in his felysshyp, ahone he toke I had enuye avenst hym so that Lodwyke of a longe tyme for fere of ye sayd Guydo kepte hym out of yo company of yo sayd mayde. Neuerthelesse afterwarde ouercomen with the love of you mayden, somtyme haunted 't wente ayen to hyr as he afore tyme had done. Guydo shortly perceyuynge awayted so longe therupon, yt he the trouthe knewe, and was therof in surete that the mayden was by Lodwyke knowen 't hadde, accompanyed with hym.' Uppon a tyme it happened yt the Emperoure stode in hys halle 4 praysed gretely Alexander of his gentylnes and wysedome. herynge Guydo sayde, My lorde he is not soo moche worthy to be comended as ye were for he hath ben a longe whyle a traytour in youre house. Thenne themperoure sayd telle me how. Guydo sayd, ye have but one doughter oonly; yo whiche shall be your heyre, and :y! Lodwyke hathe defouled I lyen by hyr by the helpe of Alexander: 't he gothe to hyr euery nyght whan it pleaseth hym, and whan ye Emperoure herde yt he was sore mouyd it wexed angry, it it happened Lodwyke vpon ye same tyme to come thrugh ye hall and whan the Emperour sawe hym he sayd, what hear I of yo thou euyll and vntrue body. Yf it be founde I proued true thou shalt deve yo moost shamefull dethe yt cann be deuysed. Lodwyke sayd, My lorde ye emperoure what is ye cause. Guydo answered, I saye 't depose here afore my lorde avenst the yt thou haste defouled his couly doughter. It every nyght thou goost to hyr I doost fornycasyon we her, and yt in batayle I shall proue I make good vpon thy body wi my body. Theme sayd Lodwyke I am innocente, I not defectyue in ye cryme, I falsely ye puttest yt and layest upon me, I therupon I holde yo batayle, for I truste on god thy falshede shall come vpon thyn owne hede. Then ye Emperoure assygned theym the daye of batayle I fyghfynge. That done Lodwyke went vnto ye mayden I shewed to her ye cause 't the daye of batayle by the Emperoure assygned and in what maner Guydo hadde hym accused, and sayd to hyr, Nowe it behoueth me to have your courseyll, or els I muste deve for why as ye knowe it had not aueyled me to haue a-yensayd the batayle w'out I wolde haue yelded myselfe gylty. Guydo is stronge ? hardy in armes that his lyke is none. but Alexander, I am weyke I feble I therfore yf I holde the batayle ayenst hym I am but a dede man, I so shall ye abyde shamed 't rebuked. Then sayd she, Do my counseyle in that, yt ye mystrust youre selfe. : Go hastely vnto my fader, t saye to hym that ye haue receyued letters, wherby that ye are acertayned that yo lorde your fader is sore seke I lyeth vppon his dede bed I desyreth to se you I speke wt youre persone, I to dyspose his kyngdome? his godes afore he departe out of this world, I desyre his lycence for the loue of your fader yt ye maye go t vysite hym. It yt he wyll proroge t lengthe the daye of bataylle whyles yt ye maye go t come. And whan ye haue obteyned his congye or lycence, as hastely as ye may go secretely to the kynge Alexander, I whan ye are come to hym take hym aparte I shewe hym ye cause of youre comynge I requyre hym in this youre vtter extremyte yt he wylle vs helpe I ayde. And whan yt Lodwyke had herd this courseyll, it pleased hym well t dyde hereafter. Hys leue goten t lenger daye or terme of batayle prefyxed and assygned departed I toke his iourneye towardes ye realme of Egypte, I neuer letted daye nor nyght tyll he came vnto kynge Alexanders castell. 'I whan' ye kynge Alexander hadde vnderstondynge of his comynge he was moche glad I went to mete hym I receyued him honourably, I had wonder of his comynge. Tho sayd Lodwyk. O my dere lorde I my bestebyloued frende, my lyfe I my dethe is in youre handes, for as ye sayd to me afore yt I sholde haue an other felowe yo whiche sholde lye in a wayte to aspye me I too destroye me / wout I save yo more wysely to my selfe: 't as longe as I myght I absented me tyll yt I coude no lenger. But afterwarde yo kynges sone of Spayne makynge watch soo longe on me tyll that he perceyued yo trouthe, I hathe accused me vnto ye Emperoure, so that frome this daye vnto ye viii. daye hereafter prefyxed it behoueth me to come 't fyght wt hym body ayenst body, and as ye knowe well he is a stronge t an hardy man, and I am weyke I feble, I therfore hath Florentyne counseyled me yt I sholde not hyde this my charge frome you for she knoweth you for a faythfull frende, 't that ye wolde not leue vs in this necessyte. Then sayd Alexander, is there ony body yt knoweth of your comyng vnto me for this mater more than Florentyne. He answered hym 't sayd no creature lyuynge, for I toke leue of ye Emperoure to go I vysite my fader lyenge greuously seke. Then axed Alexander hym what counseyll hathe Florentyne gyuen to you howe 't in what wyse I myght helpe He sayd, O moost constaunt I faythfull frende, in this wyse she hath counseylled me, consyderynge yt we be lyke, yt ye sholde come 't do ye batayle wyth hym, no man shall knowe you but she, and the batavil done I shall come aven to ve court I ye vnto youre countree. Then he asked whan ve day sholde be of the batayle, and he sayd this daye, viii. dayes. Thenne sayd Alexander, yf I sholde this daye tary then can I not come to yt days prefyxed. Therfore se what I shall do. I have boden all my subjectes that tomorowe they sholde come I be at my weddynge I brydale: and yf I sholde go than is y' daye loste / and yf I go not 't do the batayle than Florentyne It we are bothe vindone. what thynke we nowe beste for to doo. whan Lodwyke herde yt he fell to the erthe 't began to syghe It sorowe oute of mesure, sayinge, sorow and heuvinesse come to me on all sydes. Then sayd Alexander vnto hym, be of good comforte for I shall not forsake you thus, thoughe that I sholde lese my wyf 't kyngdome but herken what that I haue thought in so moche as we are bothe lyke; soo yt the one of vs can not be knowen frome yo other but we be bothe togyder I am not yet gretly knowen here. but my barons t other folke shall take you for me. Therfore here shall ye abyde t tary I mary my wyfe in my stede, I holde yo feest I brydale, It do in all thynges as though I were there my selfe present, excepte whan as ye come to bedde wi my wyfe loke yt ye be there true I faythfull: I I shall woute taryenge go I take my horse I ryde theder as ye batayle shall be, I yf god gyue me the vyctorye yt I may ouercome t vaynquysshe your enemye, I shall come ayen secretlye, and ye shall go ageyne to youre partyes and dwellynge playee. ... Thys done, Alexander badde Lodwyke fare well, and toke his journeye towardes ye Emperours courte, for to fyglit and to do the batayle with Guydo. I Lodwyk abode in Egypt in the stede of kynge Alexander, and vpon the next mornynge came Lodwyke as though it hadde be kynge Alexander. It solemply in ye face of the chirche maryed and spoused Alexanders wyfe, I helde ve feest and brydale wt grete royalte of delycate, t precyous metes, plente of all maner wynes, 't dyuerse melodyes of instrumentes of musyke, and he made greate joye t chere to all the noble men, & to all other people yt there was assembled. And whan ye nyghte was come, he wente to bedde with ye quene, I layd betwyxt hym and her a naked swerde, wherof she had greate wonder, but no thynge she sayd, and also he laye wt hir euery nyght as longe as Alexander was out. The kynge Alexander at the daye yt was prefixed 't sette, came vnto ye Emperoure 't sayd, O most drad souerayne lorde it is so yt I haue left my fader ryght seke. Neuerthelesse I am come for to defende myn honoure I my forwarde to performe. The Emperoure sayd ye do ryght well I accordynge to a noble man. I fortune shall fauoure you in your juste I ryght wysse quarell. And whan the Emperours doughter vnderstode yt Alexander was comen, anone she sent for him t whan as he was come to hyr she embraced hym, I with ioye I gladnesse she kyste hym, 't blessed ye tyme that she myght see hym ayen I demaunded hym where he that hadde lefte hyr frende and louer Lodwyke. Then he shewed I declared vnto hyr all yo processe I how he had left hym kyng in his realme, I toke his leue at hyr, I wente in to Lodwykes chamber, I there was no creature yt thought otherwyse but it was lodwyk, oonly excepte Florentyne. The next daye followynge afore er Alexander went vnto ye batayle he sayd vnto ye Emperoure in ye presence of Guydo. My moost redoubted souerayne lord this Guydo hath falsely t vntruely accused me vnto your noble grace, yt I sholde be of suche aqueyntaunce wt youre doughter yt sholde be vnto ye dyshonoure of your moost noble persone I hyrs, 't vnto yt I swere 't afferme, by this holy euaungelyes yt she was neuer in ony maner by me in suche wyse knowen as he hathe to you alledged 't enformed, 't that this daye wt the ayde I ye helpe of god I shall proue I make good vppon his body. Then sayd Guydo, yet ones I say ayen t swere by ye holy euaungelyes 't by all yt god hathe made yt thou hast hadde knowledge I hast defouled ye Emperours doughter, I yt I shall make good vpon thy hede. where vpon they lepte vpon theyr coursers, I fyersly ranne togyder wt theyr speres yt they bothe brake t shyuered in peces, t theye drewe theyr swerdes t faught longe togyder, tylle at ye laste Alexander wt grete myght and strengthe at one stroke smote of Guydoes hede, and sent it vnto ye Emperour's doughter wherof she was ryght gladde, I bare it vnto her fader I sayd, Fader beholde the hede of hym yt you t me hath falsely defamed. whan yt the Emperoure perceyued ye vyctory, anone he sent for Alexander whom yt he beleued hadde ben Lodwyk I sayd, O Lodwyke this daye youre honoure t my doughters ye haue saued. ye shall stande I be the more in my grace I fauour, I what soeuer he be that hereafter more defame you he shall for euer stande Alexander answerd, god helpethe & in my indygnacyon. saueth theym yt trusteth in hym, t alwayes wreketh ye blode vndeffectyue or innocent. But now my moost redoubted lorde of one thynge I require you, at my departinge fro my fader I lefte hym sore seke yt it wyll lyke you for to lycence me to go It se how it standethe wt hym, It yf yt it be ony thynge amended I shall incontynent come ayen. Then the Emperour sayd, that pleaseth me well, but ye maye in no manere wyse leue me for fro hensforth I can not be without your presence. Alexander toke leue of ye Emperoure and bad hym fare well, I rode ayen vnto his realme whome whan Lodwyk sawe he made greate chere I gladnesse, I ryghte frendlye receyued hym t sayd, O moste true frende of all frendes, tell me howe ye haue done I spedd in your iourney I nede, and what ende ye haue brought it to. Then sayd he, goo to yo Emperoure and serue hym as ye haue done tofore. I haue goten you more grace and fauoure of hym than euer ye haue hadde afore tyme I have also smyten of the hede of youre enmye and adversarye. Then sayd lodwyk, ye haue not only at this tyme saued my lyfe, but many a tymes here afore, yo whiche as yet I can not deserue, but god rewarde you, I so departed I wente ayen vnto the Emperoure, It there was no man that knewe of the absence of Alexander saue oonly Lodwyke. And whan as the nyght was come he wente to bedde with the quene, 't anone he hadde with hyr swete I frendly wordes I her embraced I kyst.

Tho sayd she, ye have made this tyme all to longe, that ye haue not shewed ony thyng of frendshyp or loue, how may this be. Thenne sayd he, wherfore saye ye that. She sayd, euery nyght as I was in my bed ye haue layde betwyxe you I me a naked swerde and ye haue neuer tasted or torned you towardes me more than nowe. And whan the kynge herde yt he thought on ye trouthe of hys felowe 't sayd vnto hyr, O my moost dere lady 't quene, it was not do ne for none eugli wyll, but for a gode probacon 't for a perpetuall loue. But she thought in her selfe yt loue shall ye neuer more haue of me, but yt dyspyte she thought I shall auenge vpon the. Tho was there a knyght yt she afore had a lytell loue and fauour vnto, I she began for to loue hym more 't more, so longe tyll at ye laste they thoughte I ymagyned how they myght destroye I sle ye kyng. I therfor they gate poyson t poysoned ye kynge, soo yt yf he had not ben ryght stronge of complexyon he had deved thereof but it wrought in hym so sore yt it caused hym to be ye moost foule and horryble lepre or laser yt euer was sene vpon erthe. lordes I noble men of his realme I the quene also seynge this despysed hym 't sayd, yt it behoued not a lepre to regne vpon vs, for he sholde not procure nor engendre ony fayre or clene heyres. And so he was deposed of yo dygnyte royall, I dryuen out of his realme. ¶ In the meane tyme deved the Emperour of Rome, I Lodwyk wedded yo doughter I after that Lodwykes fader deved, so that Lodwyke revgned bothe Emperoure E kynge of Fraunce at ones. Whan kynge Alexander herde that he thought in hymselfe, nowe my felowe revgneth togyder vpon thempyre I the realme of Fraunce, to whome maye I better goo than to hym for whome many tymes I haue aduentured my lyfe. and vpon a nyght he rose vp I made hym redy I toke wt hym hys staff I claper, I yede towarde themperours courte. And whan he was come nyghe to ye yate, he set hym amonges other lasers abydynge ye gyuynge of ye almesse. and on a season as ye Emperoure went out of his palays, all ye pore lasers began to rynge theyr clapers, 't ye gode kynge Alexander dyd lyke yo other, but there was none almesse gyuen to them. taryed so longe vnto ye tyme yt themperour was set 't serued Tho went kynge Alexander vnto ye yate E at ve table. knocked therat, I the porter asked who was there. Alexander answerd hym I am a pore despysed man, but for ye loue of god I require you yt ye torne not your syght fro my vysage, and yt ye wyll for ye rewarde of god do my message vnto ye Emperour. he asked what is yo mater. Alexander sayd go I tell hym here is a laser that ryght horryble is to see. The whiche prayeth hym for the loue of god I kynge Alexander that he wyll graunte hym this daye to ete his almesse afore hym vpon the erthe in his The porter sayd I wonder that ye dare desyre that of my lorde, for why all the hall is full of lordes I noble men, I vf they beholde you they sholde all abhorre I leue theyr mete. But for so moche as ye have required me so profoundly for ye loue of god I shall go t do youre erande what so euer happen therof. It so he yede forthe afore themperour I dyd his message. Whan ye Emperour herde ye porter name Alexander ye kynge of Egypte, he sayd to ye porter, go bryng hym in afore me how horryble yt so euer his vysage be, 't ordeyne hym a place afore me, yt he may etc his mete afore me in my presence. The porter brought hym in anone, I ordeyned hym a place I set hym to mete afore yo Emperour, I whan he was well refresshed he sayd vnto one of the Emperours seruauntes, My dere frende do me thys erande to ye Emperoure. ynto hym yt I praye hym for ye loue of god t kynge Alexander yt he wylle sende me his cuppe wt wyne. The seruaunt sayd for yo loue of god I shall doo it, but I beleue it wyll not be, for yf ye ones drynke of my lordes cuppe, he wyll no more drynke of ye same, neuerthelesse he dyd ye erande. Anone as the Emperoure herde hym name kynge Alexander, he comaunded his cuppe to be fylled of the beste wyne I bere it vnto hym. The whiche wyne whan he hadde receyued it he put it into hys botelle, I toke his rynge yt Lodwyke had gyuen vnto hym I put it in to the cuppe, 't sent it ayen vnto yo Emperour, and whan ye Emperoure sawe the rynge anone he knew it yt it was the same yt he had gyuen vnto Alexander in frendeshyp whan yt he departed fro hym, I thoughte in his herte yt Alexander is dede, or ellys this man is merueylously come vnto ye rynge, & çomaunded anone that the laser sholde not departe vnto ye tyme he had spoken wt hym, for in no wyse he coude haue knowlege of hym nor yet reputed hym for Alexander. after that the dyner was done I ended, the Emperoure toke the seke man aparte and askyd howe he came by yo rynge. Alexander demaunded yf he knewe well ye rynge. The Emperour sayd, I knowe it Alexander sayd, wote ye also to whome ye haue ryght well. gyuen it. Themperour sayd I wote ryght well. Howe is it than sayd Alexander yt ye knowe not me, for I am Alexander to whome ye haue gyuen ye same rynge, whan the Emperoure herde yt he felle downe to the grounde for sorowe I tare and rente his robys I clothes, I wt grete syghynges and bewaylynges sayd, O Alexander ye be the one halfe of my soule, whehe (sic) is your goodlye and delycate body yt was so fayre yt nowe so vnclene I wretchedly is enfecte. he answered, This is me hapned for the grete fydelyte that ye have done to me in my bedde with my wyfe, whan ye layd a naked swerde betwyxt you I hyr, wherfore she became wrothe I hated me, that she I a knyght that afore tyme she ought hir loue vnto haue impoysened me as ve maye see. 't aboue y' they have dryuen me out of my realme. I whan the Emperoure herde that he for loue toke hym aboute yo necke I kyste hym I sayd, O my moost entyerlye beloued brother, I sorowe to see you in this grete syknesse 't mysery, wolde god I myght deve for you, but my moost dere frende, suffre pacyently a lytell tyme tyll yt we have sente for all ye physycyens t wyse maysters in physyke to haue theyr counseylle t aduyse. yf there be ony remedye or hope of recouerynge of your helthe, 't yf it be possyble for to helpe you, we shall neyther spare Empyre lordshyps nor other good temporall to make you hole I sounde. In the meane whyle he was brought into a fayre chamber rychely appareylled & appoynted of all maner thynges yt were requysyte t necessarye for his ease I helthe. I in all haste he sente his messangers by all partyes of ye worlde, for ye experte 't moost wyse physycyens y' myght be founde. Of whome within a moneth were come 't assembled before ye Emperoure xxx. ye whiche were ryght experte & subtyll in ye scyence. To whome themperour sayd, My welbeloued maysters I haue a frende yt greuousely is infecte wt a lepry, whome I wolde ryght fayne were heled I made sounde. It no thynge theron to spare neyther golde ne syluer ne all ye other goodes yt I haue in this worlde, but I wolde gyue it to recouer hys helthe. The maysters answered It sayd all yt euer is possyble to be done by physyke yt ye shall sone vnderstande after yt we have seen the persone. It forthwt as they had seen hym, I perceyued ye cause I mater of ye infyrmyte, they juged it a dysease vncurable for all ye maysters lyuynge. and whan the Emperoure herde yt he was ryght sory in hys herte, 't remytted it vnto ye helpe of almyghty god callynge vnto hym relygyous men, I poore people, I other deuoute persones I desyred theym to praye to god, yt he wolde wouchesaufe to make hole his frende ve sooner for theyr gode dedes It prayers. and he hymselfe with manye other fasted t prayed humbly to almyghty god for yo helth of his frende. Uppon a daye as kynge Alexander was in his prayers, there came vnto hym a voyce saynge Yf the Emperoure wyll wt his owne handes slee hys two sones, whiche his wyfe hathe born by hym at one burden, 't wasshe thy body w' the blode of them, thy body I thy flesshe shall be as fayre I as clene as yo flessh of the lytell chyldern. whan kynge Alexander had herde this he thought in hymselfe, this vysyon is not expedyente to be shewed for it is sore avenste nature yt ony man sholde slee his owne sones for yo recoueryng of the helthe of a straunge man. The Emperour nyght & daye laye in his prayers wt greate deuocyon, It prayed to god for ye remedye of kynge Alexander. So yt at the laste there came a voyce vnto hym I sayd, how longe shall ye thus crye I calle vpon me whanne it is openly shewed I notefyed vnto Alexander how that he shall be made hole. The Emperoure herynge that wente vnto Alexander & sayd, Of all frendes yo beste I mooste true, blessed be the moost hyghe god the whyche neuer faylethe yt call I truste vpon hym, of whome I haue knowlege yt it is shewed vnto you howe I in what wyse that ye maye be made hole, wherfore I praye you that ye wyll it openly shewe vnto me that we maye joye togyder. A yf ye nede ony thynge therto that I maye do I shall fulfyll it vnto my powere and for your helthe gyue all yt I haue. Alexander said Syr I dare not shewe to you how yt I maye be cured or heled of my maladye, for it excedethe 't it is a thynge ayenste nature for to be done, therfore I wyll not shewe it to you, howe be it grete truste t confydence is in you. The Emperoure sayde Alexander truste in me, for what so euer is possyble for to be done for the recouerynge of youre helthe I shall do it I therfore hyde no thynge frome me. Then sayd Alexander I have of god knowlege yt yf ye wyll slee youre two sones with youre owne handes I wasshe me in theyre blode I sholde be hole, I therfore I have not shewed it vnto you, for me thynketh it is ayenst nature yt the fader sholde slewe his owne chyldern for yo helthe of a straunge man. The Emperoure sayd saye not yt ye be a straunge man, for I loue you as I do my selfe, I therfore yf I hadde ten chyldern I sholde notte spare one alyue to haue youre helthe. after that ve Emperoure watched I spyed his tyme whan ye Empresse I all ladyes I chambereres were oute of yo waye I whan tyme was he entred into ye chamber where as the chyldern slepte, I drewe out his knyfe I cutte asonder bothe theyr throtes, I gadred ye blode in a vessell, I therin he bathed I wasshed Alexander. I whan he was so bathed his body I flesshe was as fayre 't as clene as thought (sic) it had ben of a yonge chylde. Then ye emperour had knowlege of his vysage, I kyssed hym sayng, O good Alexander nowe I see you in ye same forme whiche I have often tymes dylected in, blessed be god that euer I hadde thyse chyldern, by yo whome ye be holpen and made hole. It yet wyste no man of the deth of yo chyldern saue oonly yo emperoure I Alexander. I whan as the emperoure sawe yt Alexander was parfytly heled, he sayd vnto hym, I shall ordeyne to you an honeste companye ? ye shall go frome hens ten myle the next daye sende vnto me a messager, I yt ye shew openly vnto me of youre comynge, and I shall then with all solempnyte come I mete you, I ye shall abyde with me vnto the tyme that we maye otherwyse prouyde for your realme. This counseyll pleased Alexander ryght well, I accordynge to ye same it was done. for on you nexte daye came you messager vnto the emperoure shewynge hym ye comynge of kynge Alexander t whanne the empresse herde that she was ryghte gladde, 't sayd vnto the emperoure, O my lorde haue ye not nowe a cause of greate ioye, that kyng Alexander whome we of a longe tyme haue not seen. and yf it please you to go and mete hym with your lordes and seruauntes, I shall followe you with my ladyes I gentylwymen. It yet wyste she not the dethe of hyr chyldern. Then rode they forth with a grete companye and met with the kynge Alexander and whan they mette togyder, with greate reuerence and honoure they receyued hym, and with grete gladnesse and joye they broughte hym in to the palays. and whanne the tyme of dyner was come Alexander was set at ye table betwyxt yo emperour 't yo empresse 't all the chere yt she coude make she dyd to hym. and whan the Emperour perceyued that, he was ryghte well pleased I sayd, O myne owne Florentyne I joye aboue all thynges yt ye do I make to kynge Alexander soo gode chere. Then sayd she, wherfore sholde I not, is not his comynge to vs bothe joye I gladnesse but more to you my lorde, for this dygnyte yt ye are in by hym ye are promoted, It many tymes he hathe saued you fro yo dethe. Themperour sayd than I praye you myn owne Florentyne yt ye wyll take hede to my wordes y' I shall saye to you. Sawe ye not y' foule laser, whiche the laste daye sate before oure table, and prayed me for the loue of god 't kynge Alexander yt I shold gyue hym drynke. she sayd, My lorde I saw hym well a more horryble man I neuer behelde. then sayd Themperoure, I demaunde nowe this of you. I put case yt he were kynge Alexander L that he in ony wyse coude not be made hole but wt the blood of your sones, the whiche ye in one daye brought in to this worlde, wolde ye not yt theyr bloode were shed that he myght bathe hym therin to ye entente yt by the same he myght haue parfyte helthe as ye nowe se hym in. She sayd my lorde wherfore demande ye me yt question. I saye I lete you have knowlege for trouthe that yf I hadde ten sones I sholde gladly slee them wt min owne handes to prepare tordeyne for hym a bayne, I sholde wasshe hym therin myne owne selfe, rather than I sholde leue hym in suche peryll. for god myght well sende vs mo chyldern. but suche a true frende were as a thynge impossyble for vs to recouer or fynde. Whan themperour herde this of hyr, he was well contente I pleased in his mynde I sayd, O wyfe had ye leuer haue your chyldern dede than Alexander shold be in yt sekenesse of lepery. therfore shall I open and shewe to you nowe yo trouthe of yo mater. That foule laser the whiche ye sawe was Alexander that syttethe here, 't by yt maner he is made hole wt the blode of our sones, I they are dede: as yo Empresse herde yt she began to sorowe as nature wolde, all thoughe she had sayd afore yt she had leuer see hyr chyldern dede than she wolde suffre Alexander in suche payne. The nourysshes of ye chyldern vnderstandynge this, wt grete cryenge 't wepynge went to ye nourysshery or chamber of them, It grete sorows I bewaylynge was made thrughe themperours courte for his sones. I whan the nourysshes came into yo chamber, they founde the chyldern playinge 't syngynge of yo moost blessed vyrgyne Mary, aue maria gracia plena dns tecum, I tho went they ayen in all haste vnto yo Emperour I shewed hym yt his sones were lyuynge It that about theyr throtes there as they were cutte they have a cercle of threde of golde, I therof was grete joy & gladnesse in all ye courte, & gaue thankynges vnto al[m]yghty god I to ye blessed vyrgyne mary his moder of yt grete myracle, after yt themperoure wt a grete multytude and company of people gadred t assembled went wt Alexander into Egypte t set hym ayen into his royalte It possessyon of his Realme I the quene wt the knyghte whiche lyued togyder in auoutry he dyd them both to be brent in too poudre. And whan this was all done, the Emperoure hadde a syster oonly whom he gaue Alexander vnto his wyfe. And whanne kynge Alexander had all his realme obteyned ayen t was sette in gode reste 't peas y' Emperoure wente aven vnto his Empire, I the kynge Alexander ryght wysely I manly gouerned hymselfe in all his feates & actes so yt he ouercame all his enmyes I rebelles. And whan he was in al his glorye, peas I myght, he hadde thought I mynde vpon his fader I moder, by whome he was caste into the see, which dwelled in ferre partyes from thens he sent to them a messager 't dyd them to haue knowelege yt the kynge of Egypte vpon suche a daye wolde be wt them to ete I to drynke I to make good chere. and whan the messager was come too them, they receyued hym wt grete joye 't with gyftes largely to hym gyuen sent hym ayen, saynge yt theyr seruyces sholde be redy at all tymes to do ye kynge plesure but yt coude they neuer by power fully deserue yt he wolde wouchesauf to shewe them yt honoure, wherto they were not worthy, he for to come to them to ete I to drynke I sporte hym. The messager went ayen vnto ye kynge 't shewed how gladlye yt they wolde receyue hym, 't what rewarde they had gyuen hym I how faythfully they were I redy to do hym seruyce at his comaundement, wherewt the kynge was well contente. And whan yo daye was comen yt was prefyxed, the kynge with a fayre company rode towarde his faders house, yo whiche as well to yo knyght his fader as to his moder was vnknowen that he was theyr sone. Whanne the kynge was come nygh vnto his faders castell, the knyght rode to receyue and mete hym, I whan he come nyghe vnto yo kynge he descended frome his horse 't reuerenced hym with his knee on the erthe, but the kynge toke hym vp shortly. T comaunded hym to ascende ayen vpon his horse, 't rode so togyder cheke by cheke vnto yo castell. And whan they were come theder the moder came them to mete, I felle upon hyr knees to ye erthe 't welcomed hym gladly. The kynge toke hyr louynly vp & kyssed hyr ryght frendly. & she sayd, My moost honorable lorde ye do vnto vs vnworthy grete honour wt the presence of your persone moost honourable, the whiche we neuer more can deserue. After yt all the mete was all redy, It the tyme of yo day was come to go to dyner. The fader came wt a basyn, I with an ewyr, I the moder wt a towell saynge, Syre all thynge is redye, please it you to wasshe. 't whan yo kyng sawe that he smyled 't sayd vnto hymselfe, Nowe is yo songe of the nyghtyngale true, for my fader 't my moder sholde gladly fulfyll as I sayd, yf yt I my selfe wolde therto consente and suffre them to do it. But he wold not suffre theym for to doo too hym suche seruyce, saynge youre aege is for to be honoured and worshypped / It therfore I wyll not of it, and called vnto hym one of his seruauntes the whiche serued hym therof. Thenne sayd the knyght, ye wyll not suffre vs too do it for our honour, for we are not worthy therto. The kynge sayd, haue not I sayd that for your aege I forbere you it. whan ye kynge was set at ye table, he set his moder on ye ryght hande of hym, I his fader on his lefte syde I they as moche as they myght behelde his vysage & countenaunce. The dyner ended ye kynge entred in to a chamber, I made ye knyght wt his lady to come in to hym, I comaunded all other to auoyde I goo out. and whan they were thus alone, yo kynge sayd vnto them haue ye no chyldern. They answerd we have neyther sone ne doughter. and ye kynge sayd had ye neuer none. The knyght answered, we have hadde one sone, but he is longe agone dede. The kynge asked of what dethe deyed he. knyghte sayd, a naturall dethe: Tho sayd yo kynge, yf I maye otherwyse knowe yt he deved than are ye founde wt a defawte. Tho asked the knyghte, My lorde wherfore enquyre ye thus after oure sone. The kynge answered, that do I not wtout cause, I therfore I wyll knowe of what dethe he deved. I yf ye wyll not tell me I shall cause you to deye a shamefull dethe, whan they herde that they fell too grounde upon ther knees afore hym t asked hym mercye t forgyuenesse of theyr lyues. The kynge wolde not suffre them to knele, but scortly toke them vp ? sayd, To that entente came I not in to your house to ete your brede t to betraye you. but saye me you trouthe I ye shall be saued, for it is gyuen me to vndestande that ye haue put hym to dethe, and yf that come in iugemente ye muste deve a shamefull dethe. Than sayd the knyght, lorde pardone me my lyfe I shall shew you yo very trouthe. The kynge sayd fere not, for I shall do you no harme. Tho sayd he, Souerayne lorde we had a sone oonly yt was wyse I lettred I ryght well vnderstande. And vpon a tyme as he stode afore vs t serued at ye table, There came a nyghtyngale yt ryght swetly songe, whoos songe he began to interprete and tell vs what it mente 't sayd: This byrde syngeth that I shall become so grete I myghty a lorde yt it shall be to youre honoure I aduaunsement in suche wyse yt ye my fader shall be gladde to holde ye basyn wt water to wasshe in my handes, I my moder ye towell yf y' I wolde suffre it. And whan I herde y' I was sore meued I toke I caste hym in to y see for too drowne. The Tho sayd the kynge what euyll myght haue come to you yf he hadd ben made so grete 't myghty, me thynketh it sholde haue been youre honoure I proufyte. The knyghte sayd lorde hø it was no reason but a woodnesse. The kynge answered: yt was a grete folysshnes of you yt ye wolde do ayenst ye ordynaunce 't wylle of god. But nowe ye shall knowe for trouth yt I am youre sone yt ye caste in to ye see. 't god of his grete mercye t goodnesse hathe saued me, t by his grace hathe brought me too this astate I dygnyte. and ye fader I moder :VI herynge yt with fere I joye replenysshed fell flat to ye grounde, whom he louynly 't frendly toke vp saying fere not, but rather be glad 't joyous for ye shall no thynge suffre, but my exaltacyon shall be your glorye I joye I proufyte I kyste bothe his fader 't moder wt grete joye 't gladnesse. Tho began yo meder (sic) to wepe. Than sayd ye kynge wepe not but be of gode chere for in my realme ye shall be honoured aboue me durvnge my lvf 't toke them wt hvm in to his realme where they dwelled togyder in honour I joye, I ended theyr

dayes wt joye I myrthe.

Here followeth ye applycacon of ye example to purpose.

T[h]enne sayd the Emperours sone, lorde haue ye vnderstande what I have sayd. Themperoure sayd ryght well. Tho sayd the sone, My mooste honourable 't redoubted fader, all thoughe yt god hathe gyuen I indued me wt wysdome I vnderstandyng aboue many other, yt sholde not be in appayrynge of youre honoure It myght, but more for the preservacyon of the same. So in lyke wyse ye kynges maieste which was no thynge to ye hynderaunce of his fader, but rather for his worshyp? proufyte, for as long as they lyued they were honoured in his realme. Than sayd themperoure, My dere sone I wyll all hole resygne to you thempyre too gouerne, for I perceyue well by youre narracon yt ye haue to me declared, yt it is beste to me t moost for myn ease yt I leue this besynesse I labour I take me to more reste, for I am olde I feeble. The sone answered his fader, My lorde fader, so shall it not be, but as longe as ye lyue ye shall haue the auctoryte and myght of thempyre to do and commaunde as it apperteyneth vnto an Emperour, but in all besynesses yt are labourouse I wyll alwayes be redy to mynystre I to serue you accordynge to my dute.

[How Judgement was given upon the Empress and how that she and her Lover were both put to death.

[Then the Emperor commanded the judges and justices to sit in judgement and to bring again the Empress before them; with the Ladies and also the Ribauld, her best beloved, cloathed in the vesture and habit of a woman, whom he did cause to stand next unto the Empress; then the Emperor's son asked sentence and just judgement upon them, saying,

[My most honourable Lord and father, even as you are Emperour of the World; and that your majesty and power requireth to do true justice unto all your subjects that desire it: so now I demand that you this day do give right sentence and true judgement upon the untruth, falshood and shame which were put and alledged unto me by the Empress; for the which accusations I have been seven times led unto the gallows and have stood in great jeopardy and peril of my life; and also that she hath been to you untrue of her body as you have seen by good proof made before you; and on the which I ask judgement; and therefore command your Justices and Judges to give sentence thereupon, according to Right, Equity and Law.

As soon as the Empress heard this, she fell flat to the earth before the Emperor and asked mercy and forgiveness for her just offence and misdoing; but it helped nor profited nothing. for the son would have right and desired Judgement. spake the Judges and Justices, her own misdeeds condemn her, and the report of her Lemmon by her kept and found; therefore we give sentence against the Empress, that she shall be bound to a horses tail and drawn through all the streets of the City to the place of execucyon there to be brent. Twe iuge also I gyue sentence avenste the rybaude yt he shall be quartred I smyten in peces I his flesshe caste vnto ye houndes, and byrdes of you ayre for to deuoure hym, I this sentence was approbate I alowed of all people.

¶ Hereafter in shorte tyme deyed yo Emperoure, I Dyoclesyan his sone gouerned I ruled thempyre wt grete wysdome, I helde I kept his maysters wt hym in grete honoure I glorye. By whoos counseyll I wysdom he gouerned the Empyre, yt he excelled all his predecessours in rychesse I in doynge iustice I ryght. And his maysters loued hym aboue all other thynges in the worlde. So that many tymes they put themselfe in grete perylle I ieoperdye of ther lvues for hym. And so they ended theyr dayes in grete joye I honoure, and comended theym to almyghty god.

¶ Thus endeth the treatyse of the seuen sages or wyse maysters of Rome. Enprented in Flete Strete in ye sygne of the sone, by me Wynkyn de worde.
